Local News.

—J. A. C. Rowan is now Chief of Petoskey Fire Department.

—The Chaloupka building, on the north side has been re-shingled.

—The carpenters are getting on rapidly with Major Green's store building.

—Michigan is the only State whose wheat crop exceeds that of last year.

—All honorably discharged Union soldiers are exempt from paying a poll tax.

—The new [illegible] building is nearly completed and will be occupied about the last of next week.

—The sidewalks in various parts of the village are so badly out of repair as to cause general comment.

—Col. O. T. Booth has sold his wood on Little Traverse bay, 3,000 cords in all, and it is being shipped to Chicago.

—Plans and purposes are developing which will open up building and improvement next spring with renewed energy.

—It strikes us that if Petoskey can afford the electric light, Charlevoix can afford a few street lamps of the gasoline order.

—The Village Council would put in the public sisterns voted last spring, but they are unable to find unemployed masons to do the work.

—Alt. VanDusen and Chester Blanchard, of Norwood township, caught a large bear in dead fall on Sunday, and have it's hide on exhibition.

—Paul Chartrand advertises a farm for sale elsewhere.

—Work on the flouring mill lags somewhat for lack of timber.

—Clarence H. Leonard, city editor of the Detroit Post, called on us Monday.

—Armour & Co., of Chicago, have slaughtered 1,036,344 hogs during the past year.

—The Charlevoix flouring mill will be entirely covered, roof and sides, with corrugated iron.

—The engine and boiler for the Riffenburg flouring mill arrived yesterday by the propeller Lawrence.

—Gard Brown has gone to Detroit and Howell on a few weeks visit, and his friends of both sexes are beginning to sigh for his return.

—The Elk Rapids iron furnace is doing the biggest work of any charcoal furnace in this or any country, with a daily average of 54 tons.

—Al. Washburn has begun the erection of a residence on Main street. It will be 24x30, will be veneered with white brick, with red trimmings, and will be of Swiss order.

—There is a talk of a telephone line from Grand Rapids north along the G. R. & I. railroad. The subject of a branch to Bellaire from Mancelona is being agitated, the cost of which will be about $150.

—Master Watt Taylor, a juvenile hay fever victim, returned to his home at Dixon, Ill., Monday. He was accompanied by Ed. Aldrich, who will be in the employ of Watt's father, Geo. O. Taylor, for the winter.

—Casper Schuler, of Elk Rapids, is accused of borrowing a horse of R. A. McCutcheon, of Leetsville, some time ago and forgetting to return the same. McCutcheon started from here with a Circuit Court replevin Wednesday for Elk Rapids where the horse is said to reside.—Bellaire Breeze.

—J. L. Hurd returned from Chicago Monday.

—Robert Adams has removed from Bayfield, Wis.

—Abe Rosenthal returned to Charlevoix and business,—yesterday.

—Chas. Swallow has been awarded the contract for painting the roof of the village hall.

—Mr. Ed. F. Parmelee, of the SENTINEL, and wife, arrived home yesterday from their east trip.

—The firm of Hinds & Carroll, of Horton's Bay, has been dissolved. Carroll will continue the business.

—Dave Bradbeer, the photographer, will remove his portable gallery to East Jordan, and on the second day of the fair will be prepared to take first-class photographs.

—Rev. C. F. VanAuken, will occupy his pulpit in Charlevoix next Sabbath morning and evening. He will also deliver a sermon to young men, at Ironton, on Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

—Rev. J. T. Iddings returned from the M. E. conference this morning. His many friends in and out of the church will be glad to learn that he has been returned to Charlevoix for his third year. Regular services next Sabbath.

—Brown & Co's new bank building was formally occupied Sunday, by the holding of Episcopal services therein. The bank is now doing business in the new quarters, and the family is settled in the resident portion. The building is a model of interior elegance and convenience, and outwardly an ornament to the street and village.

—Mr. Wright Ripley of Port Austin, the new keeper of the Charlevoix pier light, arrived on the Lawrence to-day, with his wife, three sons, Mrs. Ripley's mother and sister, Mrs. Kimball and Miss Edith Kimball. Their household goods arrived with them. Mr. Ripley has been assistant keeper of the Port Austin light for two years, and was promoted to the Charlevoix light by Inspector Cook.

—The Cheboygan Tribune says that P. M. Dorman, has purchased a farm in Sanilac county, about 1½ miles from Lexington and proposes turning granger. He and family left this week for their new home. Mr. Dorman expects to ship eggs, butter and produce to Cheboygen, Mackinac and St. Ignace and will make several trips up during the season of navigation each year.

—A South Haven special to the Inter Ocean dated the 23d says:

The body of John Swails, the mate of the schooner Ona S. Swails, washed ashore yesterday, and was buried to-day. He was knocked off by the foreboom on Saturday, Sept. 5, two miles north of here, and was found on the beach three miles south. He was a single man, 26 years old. His brother Edward is captain of the schooner. All the sailors in the harbor attended the funeral. He was a splendid fellow, and he will be missed by all who knew him.

—Col. O. T. Booth has sold all his wood on Little Traverse bay, amounting to 3,000 cords shipping about 800 cords of it last week. The Surprise, one of the schooners of the wood fleet, sprung a leak in the gale of Tuesday and was towed into Chicago, sinking in the river. We are glad to say that the loss of her cargo does not fall on Col. Booth.—[illegible] Record is a little off. The Surprise did not load in Little Traverse bay, nor for Col. Booth, and was not towed to Chicago. She loaded in Pine Lake, and was towed to Milwaukee.

—An Eastport correspondent of the Grand Traverse Herald says: There is now a project on foot for opening a canal from Torch Lake to Grand Traverse bay, and we have been informed by good authority that a company has been formed in Boston for that purpose with a capital of $100,000, and a charter applied for. Should this country be so fortunate as to get this much talked of canal it would then be open for vast manufacturing enterprises, and all the great forests on the banks of the inland lakes and rivers of this country would be utilized, thereby giving employment to hundreds of men.

—It is a most evident fact that at no previous time in the rise and growth of Charlevoix, has skilled and common labor been in such active demand as now. An idle carpenter cannot be found, stone-masons and brick layers are overwhelmed with work, and painters are all occupied. Many of all classes are engaged months ahead, and mechanics from other parts are being sent for, the telegraph being used to hasten their coming. The best part of it is that no building is being erected that is not for immediate occupancy, and several building enterprises are being figured on that will astonish the croakers. The fact is, there is no town in the Grand Traverse region, and that is means to include the territory bounded on the north by the Cheboygan county line, that is showing a more substantial and permanent growth. A significant feature of our improvements is their quality. Every building is an improvement upon its predecessor, and stability is a characteristic of every structure from the ground up. We expect to be able in the next few weeks to record other improvements of still more consequence.

—E. S. Hawks returned from Virginia Monday.

—Hannah, Lay & Co. have a change in ad this week.

—J. C. Schaub, of Boyne City, has made an assignment.

—Dr. Carlstein has removed his office to his new residence on Main street.

—A new stock of fall goods at Rosenthal & Son's. Read about it in their new ad.

—S. M. Hill of the Moline Plow Co., expects to build a cottage on the Charlevoix summer resort next year. Hope he will.

—R. W. Kane has recently purchased the cottage property adjoining his residence on the west. It has been moved back and placed in attractive shape for rent.

—Advices this morning, from the M. E. conference, report that the charges against Presiding-elder Stinchcomb have been proven false and that his vindication is complete in every particular.

—Financially, the Hannah, Lay & Co. steamers have not been very successful this year, but their patrons have placed on file in their memories, the many favors and courtesies extended them again this season by the officers of the Faxton and Grand Rapids.

—One night last week, John Banks, a conductor on the G. R. & I. R. R., put a passenger, an old man off the train a short distance this side of Reed City. The old man, a respectable citizen of one of the towns along the line, had lost his ticket, and Banks so far forgot himself as to use the old fellow with extreme severity. The passengers were all indignant.

—Mr. McKinnon manager of the S. H. Davis & Co. fishing establishment here, yesterday received orders from head quarters to haul off both their tugs, and take in their nets. Their total catch for the season has been 185,323 pounds, or something over 93 tons—about two-thirds white fish and one-third trout. They were all shipped fresh to Chicago and Detroit markets.

—Two young lads of Charlevoix, full of ambition and of the dime novel order of romance, last week left their homes, and hung about in the woods until a boat was due going up, when they intended to start for California. As a reminder that they were yet under parental authority their fathers had the Marshal lock them up over night in the cooler. They have come to their senses.

Mathew G. Bailey, of Mackinac, and Miss Sarah Gibson, of St. James, are to be married to-night at the residence of the bride's mother, and will take a short wedding tour before settling down in their new home at Mackinac. Mr. Bailey, is a popular and promising young man, and Miss Gibson is one of the most popular young ladies on the Beavers. The wedding to-night is expected to be largely attended.—Harbor Springs Independent.

—A visit to the roof of the village hall will well repay any one who is in doubt as to the claim that Charlevoix is growing faster than ever before. From that point can be seen every portion of the village, including the additions. There is scarcely a street but that discloses building activity. Lumber, stone or brick piles, can be seen everywhere. It is true, that never in the history of Charlevoix has real estate and improvement been more active.

—Moses Cooper, of Hayes, had a pocket book containing $180 and some valuable papers stolen from his house. Although he had suspicions as to the identity of the thief, he "laid low," after putting the matter into the hands of Sheriff Berdan. Recently a 15 year old youngster named House, of the same township, purchased a $16 rifle, and other articles in Charlevoix, and Berdan laid a trap and caught the young man, who confessed the crime. He had hidden the money, what there was left of it, and states that it was taken from its hiding place. He is now at the lock up.

—One of our influential citizens remarked to us the other day that South Arm would have a $20,000 hotel this fall. Say, Smith, how does that sound for a "collection of houses?"—East Jordan Enterprise.

If we have said anything offensive concerning the enterprising town of East Jordan, it is only a partial return for the many unkind things said and done by the press and people of that burg against Charlevoix, which is always our first love. East Jordan is growing, and is a smart and prosperous village. We are glad to note the growth and prosperity of all the towns of our growing county. It means general good and a return of business activity for our region. If the Enterprise considers the SENTINEL an enemy of East Jordan or of any other town outside of Charlevoix, it is mistaken. It has its own views concerning the right and wrong of certain matters, and it will plainly make them known when the time comes, but if East Jordan is growing, we are glad of it, and congratulate all concerned.

—S. M. Moore, C. F. Gates arrived this morning with a party of Chicago gentlemen. They will make arrangements for coming resort improvements.

—Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co. and M. J. Stockman, have been informed by their Florida agent that they will be able to eat oranges from their own groves this season.

—Hon. Chas. S. Hampton has been made chief of the Harbor Springs fire department, upon which the SENTINEL unkindly remarks that he can "blow any common fire out without the aid of a department." If he makes as energetic a chief as he did a legislator, there'll be no reason to complain of his blowing.—Detroit News.

Marine.

The wrecking schooner [illegible] arrived Monday night with a full cargo of iron and iron ore.

The Charlevoix fleet all weathered the recent gale, or were safe in some port, and no very bad luck can be recorded against them.

The schooner Fleetwing, was out in the gale of the 21st, and lost her jibboom and center board, but arrived in Milwaukee without losing any of her cargo.

The steamer Grand Rapids went into winter quarters at Traverse City yesterday, having made her last trip for the season. The steamer Faxton will make her run for the coming four weeks, leaving Traverse City at seven every morning.

The sloop yacht Puritan was sold at public auction in New York Wednesday, for $13,500. Edward Burgess who designed the yacht, was the purchaser. After the sale he stated that he had bought the Puritan for a gentleman in Boston, but would not give the name.

Cross Brothers, who took the contract to release the stranded schooner Mary Hattie from the beach at Bell's dock, got her off in good shape Sunday, and she was towed to this port, comparatively uninjured, but leaking some. Her stern is hauled out at Washburn's ship yard, to stop the worst leak, and she will be in shape to proceed to Chicago.

The U. S. Lighthouse steamer, Dahlia arrived here from below on Thursday, having on board Commander F. A. Cook, U. S. A., Inspector of the 11th Lighthouse District. The steamer laid at the pier over night and departed on her cruise of inspection of the lighthouses in this vicinity. Our pier light was pronounced by Commander Cook to be in good condition.

The R. G. Skidmore went ashore in the recent gale three and a half miles north of Leland, and the Onward was stranded at Gill's pier about the same time. Both vessels were loading at Gill's pier with wood when the wind suddenly changed from a southerly to a northerly gale. The Skidmore got away from the pier and while making for the Manitous sprung a leak and went on the beach. The Skidmore had a full cargo of wood and the Onward was nearly loaded. Both are a total loss.

Clearances from the port of Charlevoix for ports outside the Michigan district for the week ending yesterday evening: [illegible]

Norwood Notes.

Mrs. Jay Guyles has gone to Racine, and will be absent four or five weeks.

Rev. G. W. Howe preached his last sermon before conference, on Sunday evening.

Antoine Duvall, infant son of Lizzie Duvall, died on Sunday night.

Beautiful weather for a few days, and the prospects are fair for a continuance of the same.

On Friday last, a bear carried off one of Joseph Wheaton's sheep. All of our noted hunters have been in pursuit of bear-meat since then, but nary a bear have they found.

S. S. and Willard Spaulding of Elk Rapids were in town over Sunday. They intend to rent their farm and remove to Abilene, Kansas.

Harmon Wilson has bought of Gagles & Nash, the Duvall house and lot; price paid $225.

Mrs. Lizzie Russell, daughter of Thos. Muirhead, who has been visiting friends here for the past two months, returned to her home in Battle Creek on Tuesday.

That there is a proper time and place to sneeze, and when it can be profitably done, is evinced by the conduct of a young ensign, poor and friendless, of the English army. He was once attending a grand ball, and stood near a duchess. She inadvertently uttered an enormous sneeze—in fact, a snort calculated to bring on her the ridicule of the assembled guests. The young ensign took in the situation, re-echoed the refrain, and, grasping his nose as if to throttle the sneeze, rushed from the room, leaving the guests to suppose that he was the offender. The next day he received a captain's commission from the duchess' husband, with a line from the lady that "it was an ill sneeze that did nobody any good."

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Relief for the Soldiers.

Samuel Wells, Manager of the Michigan Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids, has issued the following circular for the guidance of whom it may concern:

The Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home have decided to afford immediate relief to those soldiers who are destitute and who have no way of taking care of themselves.

Characteristic of Grant.

New York Times.

I heard rather a good story the other day of Marshall Jewell and Gen. Grant. The two were enjoying a walk in Washington one evening while Jewell was a member of Grant's cabinet, and far out on the outskirts of the city they came upon a little girl crying because she had lost her way. They called a man and gave him instructions to find her home, when of a sudden up came the child's mother, a comely, rather poorly dressed young woman, in the depths of agitation. The men delivered over their infant ward and walked away a few steps, when of a sudden the president excusing himself "just for a minute," walked rapidly back to the child, whose tears were being wiped away. He didn't explain to Postmaster General Jewell what it was that had prompted his return, and Mr. Jewell did not explain, either, why he too found it convenient to go back to the little one for another minute or so. Both men had been trying to do good by stealth. Mr. Jewell had opened his purse, not suspecting Gen. Grant's motive. Gen. Grant did not open his purse, or rather the child did not get anything out of it, for by some mishap not a penny had he in his possession. Instead of coins Postmaster General Jewell found the little one with an apron full of cigars. The general had emptied his pockets into her lap. I have never heard a story more characteristic of the heedless, earnest, honest, generosity of Grant.

The recent extensive prairie fire in Dakota is a severe blow to many farmers, who have lost the entire proceeds of their year's work. Over a hundred farms were burned over and completely swept of their grain crops, along the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, between Bismarck and Fargo.

Secretary Whitney's board recommend that the four new war ships be two of 4,000 tons displacement, one of 1,700 and one of 870. The former will be much like the Boston and Atlanta, built by Roach only more powerful and expensive, having a few changes above the main deckline, though most navy officers think well of Roach's ships. One navy officer just returned from examining the best foreign war ships is greatly pleased with the Boston and Atlanta.

Gen. Rosecrans has declined the invitation of the Ohio democrats who wanted him to take part in the present campaign. As soon as President Cleveland returned from his vacation Rosecrans called upon him to ask if public officers were allowed to take part in political campaigns. It is understood that President Cleveland set his foot down and forbade such proceeding on the part of any one holding office under his administration, because he wanted to have a neutral policy. Rosecrans accordingly sent a declination to Ohio.

It is estimated that the corn crop of 1885 will reach 1,930,000,000 bushels. At the same time, the exports of provisions are falling far below those of last year, as those of last year were far below those of previous years. It is a question, the New York Tribune remarks, whether so large a yield of corn under these circumstances will prove an unmixed blessing to the farmers. If there is not within reach a market for a greatly increased quantity of provisions, it will be found difficult to consume a large stock of corn, and impossible to sell it. But the people will gain, nevertheless. To them, the great yield will mean cheaper food at once, and probably cheaper animal food for some years to come. It means a low cost of living, and therefore an ability to produce more cheaply. A large corn crop is of less importance to the railroads than a large wheat crop, because a comparatively small part of the corn produced is transported any distance from the place of production. Yet even to the railroads a great corn crop will this year be an important help, because the yield of wheat is unusually small.

The modern rationalist school of historians has decided that no such hero as William Tell and no such tyrant as Gessler ever existed. The Moses and the Pharaoh of Switzerland, they assure us, are both mythical personages. But they dare not publish these "results of criticism" among the inhabitants of the Four Forest Cantons; the wealthy hotel-keeper and the poor peasant would alike protest in no agreeable fashion against such unprofitable and unpatriotic skepticism. A curious example of the power which the legend of Tell still exerts over the population of Switzerland occurred only recently. Baron von Gessler, a Russian nobleman of the German immigration, but who never dreamed that the detested "Landvoght" of Schiller's play had a place on his family tree, hired a boat, together with some friends, to cross from Brunnen to the Rutli. During the passage one of the party chanced to address the young nobleman by his name. The boatman stared with horror. He dropped his oar for a moment, and then said to the astonishment company "I would not have a Gessler in my boat for a hundred francs." In spite of all entreaties and attempted explanations, he turned the head of his boat, rowed to the land, and insisted that the supposed descendant of Gessler should disembark.

LITERARY LIFE.

Conditions of Literary Life in England and America.

The conditions of the literary life in America are less determined than they are in England. The only organization within which authorship may be said to find substantial shelter is journalism, and this profession is so exacting and so inimical to most forms of literature, that those who have most serious thoughts of the literary life are rather desirous of escaping from journalism than of using it as a vantage-ground. It might seem at first blush as if the universities and colleges would offer a desirable fastness from which to send out ventures in literature; but the academic life is a somewhat sterile one; it is with us so identified with the pedagogue that the energies of the professor, if they move the production of books, are most likely to be occupied with the tools of the profession. Text-books in abundance issue every year from college faculties, but very few contributions to humane literature. The academic life again is so specialized that even the professor of English literature rarely produces work upon which his successor or associate may comment. His attitude toward the subject of his teaching is too critical to allow him much freedom of mind, and he is besides so conscious of his position that he is undermined in his resolution, and rendered abnormally sensitive to the criticism of others as well as of himself.

The constitution of the English universities, on the other hand, directly encourages and sustains the literary life. This is not to say that literature in its freest expression is not there, as here, outside the walls of the college, but that a man of literary taste and ambition may deliberately possess himself of academic situations which will make it possible for him to lead a literary life, free from fret and carking care; and also that the prizes for scholarship offered by the universities distinctly suggest to the student literary occupation. A man, in other words, with fortune enough to secure him a university education, may hope to win Fellowship which will demand only slight academic duties, leaving him free to devote himself to literature; and a student devoted to learning who falls into such a place will, by the very force of his own nature, be urged into literary production. Thus the university, by a provision which enlarges the scope of university life, is more than a training-school for immature minds; it is a society of scholars, and as such, directly encourages and sustains the literary life.

The university, however, is not the only English organization which fosters literature and makes a vantage-ground for the man of letters. As it is demonstrably more efficient in this respect than its American congener, so the civil service of England has offered a more convenient shelter for the litterateur than the same service in America. Our government, indeed, has not been slow to recognize authors, but it has been chiefly in the way of rewards in diplomatic service for those who have already won a certain distinction. Now and then, notably in the case of the New York Custom House, government offices have served as means to hard-working literary men, but the general insecurity which has hitherto attached to this employment and the peril to one's self-respect in seeking appointments have hindered such men from counting upon this resource. One of the probable results of a service organized upon the merit system is the attraction to it of men capable of clerkly labor, but chiefly ambitious of literary fame. The freedom from concern which enables one to lay aside his business mind, like an office coat, when the clock strikes three, and don the literary habit, is especially necessary to the calm and cheerful pursuit of literature. Such a state of things exists in London to-day, and may be confidently predicted of Washington, New York, and other cities, in the near future.—July Atlantic.

London Society Leaders.

Lady Marian Alford is the leader of one of the most exclusive sets in London. She is a devoted hostess of royalty.

The Marchioness of Lorne has her own occupations, is a passable artist, and with her husband leads a steady, respectable, refined, dignified existence.

Lady Hayter is the embodiment of the genius of liberalism. She is one of the best dressed women in London and gifted with all the graces of a born hostess.

Lady Salisbury is placed at the head of those feminine leaders who have attempted to create a salon, but hers is a Tory establishment, and she has been known to pique herself on never having crossed a whig threshold.

Lady Molinsworth has one of the most eclectic salons in London. She knows and has known everyone worth knowing in London for half a century. She has an inborn aptitude for the London dinner party of from eight to twelve persons.

Lady Lonsdale, who was recently married again, might become, under proper auspices, a social center of real political power. She has the gift of receiving guests with grace, dignity and ease. But her attention and interest are difficult to fix and her perseverance is not equal to her natural ability.

Mrs. Napier Higgins is writing in England a history of woman in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, showing that the decay of chivalry, the rise of the new learning, and the progress of the reformation marked an age in which woman was more influential in politics, society and thought than she had been before or has been since.

Mrs. Gladstone is the elderly incarnation of guileless naivete—the matronly essence of impulsive simplicity. She is to appearances all artlessness; but, in her way, one of the cleverest women living, because, in spite of over half a century of semi-public life, she has never committed a real blunder, and her aplomb is as remarkable as her discretion.—New York Graphic.

The New York Times says that Gen. Sheridan's little accident while out driving lately recalls another narrow escape he had during the later days of the War, when suddenly tripped up one day he stumbled and fell beneath a stallion's feet in camp and was fiercely kicked, narrowly escaping death. The horse's hoof scraped his coat and ripped the cloth. It was a decidedly informal rolling over the ground in a hurry that he saved his life, so his soldiers say, for the kick was viciously repeated. There wasn't anything very heroic in the General's retreat, but that other experience with horseflesh which Buchanan Read has sung to such purpose was scarcely of more consequence to Philip Sheridan.

Good Results in Every Case.

D. A. Bradford, wholesale paper dealer of Chattanooga, Tenn., writes that he was seriously afflicted with a severe cold that settled on his lungs; had tried many remedies without benefit. Being induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, did so and was entirely cured by use of a few bottles. Since which time he has used it in his family for all Coughs and Colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands whose lives have been saved by this Wonderful Discovery. Three Hundred Russian Exiles Who Are Doing Pretty Well in South Jersey.

The colony of Jewish refugees from Russia established three years ago on eleven hundred acres of land near here, writes a Vineland, N. J., correspondent to The New York Sun, purchased by the Hebrew Immigration Society, of New York, and the Jewish Society, of London, has outlived the hardships of its first years, and is beginning to be a prosperous community. The land is a rolling sea of little scrub oaks, four or five feet high, punctuated with erect dead pine trunks. Scattered here and there among the hills and hollows of the tract the sixty frame shanties in which the colonists live are hardly noticeable. The little patches of field, on which the grubbing up of the oaks has exposed a light, sandy soil that every breeze raises in a cloud of dust, seem there occasional scratchings up of the face of the barrens. There are no streets, no church, no stores, mills, or factories, nor any other indication, except the scattered houses, that three hundred people are there.

Since the first year, when all lived together in barracks, the land has been divided. Each family has about fifteen acres. Each plat cost the societies from $150 to $169, and the occupant is to pay for it one-half of the cost. They must pay 3 per cent. a year upon this price, and this interest is credited upon the principal, so that they practically have thirty-three years in which to pay for their homes. Under this arrangement the colonists take more interest in their work, and although they were all natives of cities, tradesmen, artisans, and mechanics, and knew little of farming, they have got their small clearings into a fair state of cultivation, and will this year raise an abundant crop of strawberries, raspberries and blackberries. These small fruits are all that the land can be made to produce profitably. Finding the colony in the wilderness is like looking for a four-leaved clover. A query addressed to the open door of a whitewashed shanty apparently several miles from anywhere yesterday. "Is there a Russian Jew colony anywhere around?" brought out a flaxen-haired man, a dark wife, with a red handkerchief hood-fashion on her head, and two children. Smiles were the prominent characteristic of the group. The man talked English. The rest jabbered.

"Ye-es-a; thees ees eet."

"Are you one of them?"

"Ye-es-a," with a double-sized smile.

"How are you getting along nowadays?"

"Coo-eom-a-een an' see," and the wife and children repeated the invitation in Russian, while the man led off the visitor's horse to a convenient tree. Inside the one chair was carefully wiped with a towel before the visitor was allowed to sit down. The man sat on a bench and contemplated a bowl of milk and some bread on the table. He hoped the gentleman would excuse-a him if he went on with his dinner; he had to get back to work-a. While the wife and children smiled contentedly with reflected satisfaction of hunger, and neighbors peered in at the door and window, between bites and smiles, in his slow, uncertain English, the man said the sixty families in the colony were getting along first-rate now, with the money they got from their berries and from working for other berry-growers in summer and chopping wood in winter. They liked the country "ver-a moo-ooch; oh, so moo-ooch better than eet Russia." They were all going to vote as soon as they got their papers. They have no church, but the rabbi holds services around in the houses every Saturday. Their children all go to a district school. The wife-neighbors jabbered apparently approving comments as this information was given. When the bread and milk and the information gave out, the whole party stood outside and smiled as the stranger drove away, the wife insisting on shaking hands as she said:

"Coo-eom-a-a age-e-een!"

Further on a slender, dark colonist, with a brogue like Villain Macari in "Called Back," said he was a cloak-maker, and couldn't farm; so he got cloaks from Philadelphia and made them up. All he and his family could earn was $1.50 a day. "Wo-ould I like to go back to Roosia? Oh, wo-ould I," he exclaimed, in answer to a question, and then his English gave out for a while. "Bud vhere ish de mo-oney?" he resumed. "Ah, no! I shall die here! ve shall all die here! And vo are vroom de cities!" And the maker of cloaks looked mournfully away over the scrub-oak loneliness and went back to work.

The owner of the only mill and store in the vicinity said that the colonists were doing well considering that they had been ignorant of agriculture. They were orderly, honest and industrious, and would make, he thought, good citizens. They never quarreled with their neighbors, and rarely among themselves, and always paid their debts.

Earthquake Phenomena.

The only settled facts about earthquakes are, that they are the result of some shock imparted to the rocks at a considerable distance beneath the surface, and that this shock reaches the surface in a series of concentric rings, all points on the circumference of each ring receiving the shock at the same moment, even though they may be hundreds of miles apart. In other words, all points at equal distances from the center of the earthquake receive the shock at the same moment. Although this is theoretically the case, according to well-known physical laws, still in practice the facts are somewhat different, for the shock is retarded or accelerated according as the rock opposes or favors the passage of the wave. The severity of the shock in a given place is dependent upon a variety of causes. These are: 1. The strength of the original shock; 2. the distance from the earthquake center; and, 3. the kind of rock on which one is standing, loose gravels greatly diminishing the force of the shock. The destructiveness of earthquakes depends rather upon the suddenness of application than the amount of motion. In that at Rio Bomba, it is reported for a fact that a man was hurled across a stream a distance of one hundred feet, and landed on an elevation fifty feet higher than his original position. It is an undoubted fact that objects are frequently thrown great distances. In the Mississippi valley, during the earthquakes of 1811-1814, the tops of trees were twisted and entangled, and strong log cabins were thrown to the ground. Rivers are sometimes checked in their flow, and in past geological ages some have been completely turned from their course by earthquakes.—Ralph S. Tarr in Popular Science Monthly for July.

The Yale College statistics for the class of '85 show that the average expenditure for the course of four years per man has been $5,262. Thirty-six have spent over $1,000 a year, while several, with scholarship assistance and earnings, have not spent that amount in four years. Altogether that class has earned $1... since entering, seven having made over $1,000 apiece.

I knew an old fellow out West who had mortgages on a whole town—a small town—who made it a condition of his loan that the buildings should be painted red. That was a funny-looking village. There were about thirty houses and stores and a large factory and a bridge—all red. The people in neighboring towns made lots of fun over it and the place was finally known as Redtown.

Men engaged recently in sinking a shaft at Fillard, N. Y., in the Genesee Valley, struck the first bed of rock salt ever reached by mining on this continent, and the first salt mine in America was opened at a depth, in a perpendicular line from the surface, of 995 feet.

On an apple tree in Georgia apples are growing and nearing maturity which are, to say the least, somewhat out of the ordinary. The apples are, some of them, large and well developed, but are roasted, being in taste and appearance like apples that have been before a fire.

Louise Michel, the anarchist, glories in her martyrdom and refuses to be released from prison, although President Grevy has twice offered to pardon her. She was, however, recently prevailed upon by her physician to spend a month at a watering place. At the expiration of that time she promptly returned to the Saint Lazare prison.

The Middlesex County (N. In other words, we suppose if the gutters were kept healthy they would not be unhealthy.

Ellen Johnson, a negress, who was sold fifty years ago to New Orleans parties, returned to her daughter's home at Louisville the other morning, being now one hundred and twelve years old. The daughter is sixty years of age, and the same roof now shelters great-great-grandmother, great-grandmother, grandmother, mother and children.

The improvement of the Niagara Park reservation is progressing steadily. The cataract wood lot has been cleared up, and the removal of an old building makes the view of Goat Island exceptionally fine. The old stone factory at Bridge and Canal streets has been torn down, and the old store-house on the upper end of Bath Island has been destroyed, the view of the rapids thus being uninterrupted.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes in a note declining, on account of ill-health, an invitation to speak at the recent meeting of the American Forestry Congress at Boston, says: "I fully sympathize with the noble and most important object of the congress, and I wish all success to its efforts to keep the country with leaves enough to hide its nakedness, of which it is already beginning to be ashamed."

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage has returned to his charge in Brooklyn after two months in Europe. The trustees of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, with about seventy-five of the reverend doctor's personal friends, met the steamer down the bay and escorted Mr. Talmage home. He says: "I found 'American' a password to everywhere and every one. I don't believe there is a nation in the world so popular in all countries as the United States."

The Georgia Local Option bill has become a law. It provides that upon the application for prohibition signed by one-tenth of the voters in any county, the Ordinary shall hold an election to determine whether or not spirituous liquors shall be sold in that county. If the result of the election should be against the sale, the Ordinary shall give notice once a week for four weeks, and the act shall take effect as soon as the result is ascertained, except as to the vested rights of persons whose annual license has not expired. If the result of the election should be "for sale," no other election on the question shall be held in that county within less than two years. When any county votes "against the sale" no person shall sell or barter, directly or indirectly, or give away at his place of business, or furnish at any other public place, any alcoholic, spirituous or malt liquors, or any other drinks which produce intoxication. Nothing in the bill is to prevent the manufacture, sale and use of domestic wine or cider, or the sale of wines for sacramental purposes, provided they are not sold by bar-rooms at retail. Licensed druggists will not be prevented from furnishing pure alcohol for medicinal or scientific purposes.

At Montreal on the 22d there were twenty-seven deaths from small-pox, and in surrounding towns the scourge was rapidly spreading.

LATER.

The eleventh annual convention of the American Bankers' Association assembled in Chicago on the 23d, with a large attendance. The President, Lyman J. Gage, delivered his annual address, and papers on the silver question were read and discussed.

Up to the 23d there had been 100,000 deaths from cholera in Spain since the outbreak.

A wrecking crew of twenty men from St. Johns at work on a stranded vessel off the Dominion coast were drowned during a gale on the 23d.

Colonel Absalom Baird was on the 23d appointed Inspector-General of the Army by the President.

Such immense crowds attended the concert given by Christine Nilsson at Stockholm on the 23d that seventeen persons were crushed to death. The accident occurred after the concert, and while Mme. Nilsson was singing from the balcony of the Grand Hotel.

The Prohibitionists of Iowa met at Cedar Rapids on the 23d and nominated James Mickelwaite, of Mills County, for Governor; W. H. Berr, of Cedar, for Lieutenant-Governor; Jacob Rogers, of Fayette, for Supreme Judge, and William H. Taft, of Mills, for Superintendent of Schools.

Five colored men were drowned a few evenings ago on the Kentucky River, near Frankfort, by the upsetting of a boat.

Carr for Lieutenant-Governor; Colonel Anson S. Wood for Secretary-of-State; James W. Wadsworth for Comptroller; Charles F. Ulrich for Treasurer; Edward B. Thomas for Attorney-General, and William P. Van Rensselaer for State Engineer. The platform demands the strengthening and extension of the Civil-Service laws of the State and Nation and the rigid enforcement of their provisions; favors the repeal of the Silver Coinage Act and a protective tariff; arraigns the National and State Administrations for hypocritical pretenses; insists that the right of suffrage must be maintained free and untrammeled in all of the States, and recommends the passage of various measures for the benefit of the laboring classes.

DOWN ON THE DOLLAR.

The American Bankers' Association Meets at Chicago—The Mass of Argument Shows a Decided Feeling Against the Continued Coinage of the Silver Dollar.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—The convention of the American Bankers' Association was called to order in Haverly's Minstrel Theater, at 10:30 a. m. yesterday, by the President, Lyman J. Gage, of the First National Bank of this city. Rev. Arthur F. Swazey invoked the visitation of Divine power on the work of the convention, and asked that commerce might soon be raised from its feverish condition.

President Gage then delivered his annual address, from which the following extracts are taken:

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. Eaton, Chairman of the Commission, Resigns—A Lengthy Letter in Which He Commends the Policy of the Administration—The President's Reply.

Washington, Sept. 24.—The correspondence that passed between Dorman B. Eaton and President Cleveland on the subject of the former's resignation as Chairman of the Civil-Service Commission was given to the press last night. The commissioner does not urge the acceptance of his resignation until such time in the autumn as the President may find it convenient to make a new appointment. Mr. Eaton gives the history of his connection with Civil-Service Reform before and after its adoption by the Government, and explains why he did not resign his position before. The friends of reform, he says, urged the necessity of his remaining until the Civil-Service machinery was in good working order, and it could be seen what a change in the Administration would develop. Another reason given for withholding his resignation is that he should regard it as a pernicious precedent, utterly repugnant to the spirit of the Civil-Service act, to treat the office of Civil-Service Commissioner as political, and hence as one to be filled at the beginning of each Presidential term. Mr. Eaton continues:

[illegible]

Mr. Eaton expresses the opinion that in the near future civil-service reform will have not only a greatly enlarged, but an almost unchallenged enforcement, as it has now become an issue between the people and the politicians.

In reply President Cleveland requests Eaton to retain his position until November 1, and expresses regret that the commissioner should have determined to withdraw from an office where his services have been of such inestimable value to the country. The President says:

[illegible]

The President concludes his letter by expressing entire confidence in Mr. Eaton's attachment to civil service reform, and indulges the hope that he will continue his interest in the cause after he has surrendered his office.

GRANT'S OLD REGIMENT.

Reunion at Neoga of the Twenty-First Illinois Volunteers—Colonel Fred Grant Enthusiastically Received—The General's Last Peace Message.

Neoga, Ill., Sept. 23.—The veterans of the Twenty-First Regiment Illinois Volunteers are holding a reunion here. This was the first regiment commanded by General Grant at the beginning of the late war. Colonel Fred Grant arrived during the afternoon yesterday and was enthusiastically greeted. At a meeting held in the Presbyterian Church last night Colonel Grant was asked to address his father's old comrades. He declined himself from making a speech, but stated that he would read them the last line written by his father on matters pertaining to the war, and which had never before been made public. He read as follows:

[illegible]

A general amen went up from the audience, and then the meeting quietly adjourned.

STRUCK BY A CYCLONE.

Barnum's Show-Tents Laid Prostrate, and Many People Injured.

Titusville, Pa., Sept. 23.—Barnum's show exhibited here yesterday, and during the afternoon performance a cyclone struck the tents, carrying them up in balloon shape. The canvass afterward collapsed on the crowd in attendance. There were 10,000 tickets sold, but many persons, perceiving the storm approaching, made for the open air, leaving about three thousand under the canvas. No one was killed, but many were injured. Ambulances were immediately sent to the circus, and all the doctors in the city were soon on the ground. The majority of those seriously hurt are farmers living within a radius of twenty miles, while a few live in the city.

The storm was similar to that which occurred at Cortlandt, N. Y., last year. The tent was torn into shreds, and the center poles fell, breaking arms and limbs, cutting people's heads open, and causing a terrible stampede. The seats were thrown about, even strong men realized that it was a case of life or death. Many were injured from falling and being trampled upon by the crowd.

In the menagerie the elephants got loose, but were quieted before any serious damage was done. The monkey cage was broken open and a few of the monkeys gained their liberty. The wires of another cage containing wild animals were broken, but the keepers kept the beasts in till assistance arrived.

CHINESE MINERS MOBBED.

A Washington Territory Outrage—Five Celestials Lynched.

Seattle, W. T., Sept. 23.—The Chinese quarters at the Black Diamond mines were raided Monday night by a mob armed with repeating rifles. Each man was disguised by a sack drawn over his head, with holes cut for mouth, nose and eyes. The Chinese fled in terror from their houses, which were then burned. These Chinamen had already been discharged from the mines and expected to return to Seattle.

There is much excitement over the Chinese question here. A convention, to consist of delegates from all parts of the Puget Sound country, has been called to meet here September 28, to devise means of ridding the country of the Chinese. The feeling is increased by the fact that the Federal authorities hardly make a pretext of stopping the Mongolians from crossing the line into Washington Territory from British Columbia, and the anti-Chinese law has thus become a dead letter.

Lewiston, I. T., Sept. 23.—Five Chinamen, implicated in the murder of Daniel Fraser and a robbery in Pierce City, were taken from jail by citizens Monday night and hanged to convenient trees.

GREAT FRAUDS.

The Canadian Pacific Victimized Out of Half a Million Dollars by Engineers and Contractors.

Montreal, Sept. 23.—The Canadian Pacific authorities have for some time entertained suspicions that they were being victimized by their civil engineers and contractors in the section north of Lake Superior. About a month ago all payments to contractors were stopped and a measurement of the different sections ordered. This has just been completed, and it shows that by blunder or fraud the company has paid to the contractors hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of the amount of work done. One contractor alone has been paid more than $100,000 for work worth about $50,000, the full amount aggregating $500,000. Detectives have been at work for some time and have discovered that engineers who were receiving salaries of $100 a month, engaged in extended building pursuits, some of them being worth from $35,000 to $40,000, which had been accumulated in a wonderfully short time. Criminal and civil proceedings will be instituted.

THE GENESTA WINS.

Terrible Weather Encountered and Several of Her Crew Disabled.

New York, Sept. 24.—The English cutter Genesta yesterday won Brenton's reef challenge cup, by beating the American schooner Dauntless in a 300-mile race from Sandy Hook light-ship to Brenton's reef light-ship and return. Time—48:07:30. The outward run was entirely uneventful, with light winds. The Genesta rounded Brenton's reef light-ship, having accomplished half of the journey, at 9:30 Tuesday night, and started on the return in a heavy fog at 11:30. When twenty miles on the homeward journey the Dauntless was sighted, and was, therefore, forty miles behind. A stiff gale in the meantime sprung up, and the Dauntless lost the head of her main topsail.

REVOLUTION.

The Populace of the Capital of Eastern Roumelia Depose the Government, and Proclaim a Union with Bulgaria—Russia and Austria Credited with Originating the Rebellion.

London, Sept. 21.—Dispatches from Philippopolis, the capital of Eastern Roumelia, state that the entire populace has risen in rebellion, deposed the Government, imprisoned the Governor-General and proclaimed a union with Bulgaria. The uprising was attended with no bloodshed. Immediately after the revolt a provisional Government was established. The militia then took the oath of allegiance to Prince Alexander of Bulgaria. The insurgents next seized all the strategic points on the Turkish frontier and blew up the bridges likely to be used by a force advancing from Turkey to rehabilitate the deposed Government. They have also destroyed all telegraphic communication with Turkey. The Bulgarian army has been mobilized and a corps sent to the Roumelian frontier.

The rebellion grew out of the long-continued exactions and oppressions of the Government of the Porte. Added to this was the great dissatisfaction felt at the personal rule of the Governor-General.

Prince Alexander, of Bulgaria, has confirmed M. Stransky as Provisional Governor of Roumelia. The Bulgarian Chamber of Deputies will be convoked on Thursday next. The army of Bulgaria is being mobilized, and when united with the Roumelian military, will, it is estimated, form an effective force of 50,000 men. Russian officers command the bulk of the Roumelian militia. Bands of Bulgarians, under the command of Russian officers, are entering Roumelia.

Advices from Berlin and Vienna favor the opinion that peace will be maintained on the ground that the revolution was concerted in St. Petersburg, with the assent of Austria, under an agreement made at the Kremsir interview, according to the terms of which Austria is at liberty to annex Bosnia and Herzegovina. If the Porte should threaten to adopt violent measures Russia, it is said, will intervene in favor of Roumelia.

The Daily News reminds its readers that when Disraeli effected the Berlin treaty Gladstone predicted the present disruption. Even the present Ministry, the News says, will hardly venture to use England's influence to crush the growth of liberty in Roumelia.

Philippopolis, Sept. 21.—Prince Alexander has issued a proclamation announcing that in accordance with the wishes of the entire populace he assumes sovereignty over the two provinces of North and South Bulgaria. Measures will be taken to preserve peace, and all who oppose the new Government will be severely punished. The Prince expresses the hope that the people will defend the union at any sacrifice. The proclamation, which was received here by telegraph, was read publicly amid the greatest enthusiasm. Prince Alexander is expected here hourly. The populace is armed with lances, but perfect order prevails. The deposed Governor, Gabriel Pasha, is under guard. He is well treated, in accordance with his rank.

The Turkish and Greek portion of the inhabitants have thanked the Government here for having taken measures for their defense, and have offered their services in resisting a Turkish invasion.

Constantinople, Sept. 21.—A council of Ministers was held yesterday, presided over by the Sultan, at which it was decided to appeal to the powers to maintain the rights of the Porte in Roumelia. Orders have been issued to collect an army corps at Adrianople.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 21.—It is hoped in court circles here that the signatory powers of the Berlin treaty will settle the Roumelian troubles amicably, keeping in sight the just grievances of the people. Austria, it is thought, will probably annex Bosnia and Herzegovina.

A MOVING WALL OF FLAME.

Hundreds of Acres of Growing Crops in Dakota Devastated by Prairie Fires—The Losses So Far Estimated at $100,000—Some Loss of Life.

Bismarck, D. T., Sept. 21.—No rain has fallen in this region since the 1st of the month, and the grass is very dry. Fires began early this week near this city, and since Thursday have traveled rapidly eastward. About twenty-five thousand bushels of grain and several hundred tons of hay have been destroyed in the Apple Creek Valley north of Menoken, and at the same time another fire ran from west of Menoken to East Sterling, traveling a distance of twenty-five miles in about two hours.

SHROUDED AND IN THE SEA.

We stood on the deck a reverent group, in light of the setting sun,
With heads all bared and voices hushed, and listening every one,
To the deep, low tones of the skipper's voice, who the burial service read,
And the solemn words awed each rough heart as we gave to the sea its dead.

The unbidden tears all dimmed my eyes as I gazed on the quiet face;
A ray from the sun in the red'ning west seemed to light it with love and grace,
And my heart was filled with pitying love for somebody far away,
Who was dreaming, perhaps, of her absent boy on the eve of that sad day.

I.

The Summer Style.

A pretty girl just home from the seaside was interviewed by her stay-at-home lover on some of the reports which had come to him of her flirtations.

"Why, Frank!" she exclaimed, "you are just too foolish for anything."

"May be I am," he answered, sullenly, "but I want to know if you didn't become engaged to one of those fellows you met this summer?"

"Of course I did," she replied, with a frank smile.

"And do you expect me to stand that sort of thing?"

"Why, Frank, how you do talk. You know that was only a summer-resort engagement, and that kind never counts for keeps."

It took a good deal of persuasion, but Frank finally surrendered.—Merchant Traveler.

His Housekeeping Knowledge.

First Chum—This is a very pleasant room, old man, and we ought to enjoy ourselves.

Second Chum (gloomily)—Yes; but it will soon go to ruin unless we get a woman to take care of it.

"Oh, no it won't; we can manage that ourselves."

"Nonsense! You don't know anything about housework."

"Don't I? Well, now, let me tell you, since I've been going to see that girl with a cross father on Green street, I've learned how to dust at a moment's warning."—Philadelphia Call.

A Difference in Boxes.

"Look here, Mr. Grocer," said a Hartford citizen. "How's this? I get twice as many huckleberries for a quart as I did strawberries." "Well, that's your luck. Besides, huckleberries are smaller, and, of course, there's more of 'em to a quart." "Of course, but I don't mean that exactly. I get a bigger dish full of huckleberries than I do of strawberries for a quart." "Oh, well, I can fix that easy. Here, Bob, give this gentleman a strawberry box of huckleberries." That was about a pint and a half.—Hartford Post.

Naming a Yacht.

Enthusiastic Young Lady—Is that boat the Gracie, Mr. Smith? And that the Fanny? And that lovely, long, white, thin yacht the Ileen? What pretty names! Do they name them after their sisters—or—or their friends, Mr. Smith?

Mr. S.—Yes, generally after their friends. Sisters very seldom have pretty names.

Y. L.—Have you a yacht, Mr. Smith?

Mr. S.—No, but I am building one now.

Y. L.—And what is her name?

Mr. S.—I haven't any. I thought of calling her after you, if you would not be ashamed of her.

Y. L.—Oh, how lovely! My name is Elizabeth, you know. What will you call her, Lizzie, or Bessie, or just Bess?

Mr. S.—I didn't think of any of those names. I think I would rather call her the Mrs. Elisha Smith.—Life.

SHE TOOK THE HINT.

A Washerwoman Who Acted Promptly Upon a Rather Risky Suggestion.

At home stations the private soldiers' washing is usually done by the married soldiers' wives, who are expected to sew on missing buttons and do repairs for which a small sum is deducted from the private's pay.

Pat McGinnis had a good deal of trouble with his laundress. Sunday after Sunday had his shirt come back with the neck button off or else hanging by a thread. He had spoken to her on the subject, and she had promised to see to it, but still the button was not on properly.

He got out of patience one Sunday when the missing button had made him late for parade and exclaimed:

"Bother the woman. I'll see if I can't give her a hint this time anyhow."

He then took the lid of a tin blacking box about three inches in diameter, drilled two holes in it with a fork and sewed it on the neck of the shirt that was next to be washed. When his washing came back he found she had taken the hint. She had made a button-hole to fit it.—N. Y. Herald.

Her Sort of a Doctor.

"George, who is your family physician?"

"Dr. Smoothman."

"What, that infernal numbskull? How does it happen you employ him?"

"Oh, it's some of my wife's doings. She went to see him about a cold in her head, and he recommended that she wear another style of bonnet. Since then she won't have any other doctor."—Chicago News.

Watched the Wrong One.

Two well-dressed women, whose kinship could be seen at a glance, entered a shop in London the other day and took seats at the silk counter. The assistant had scarcely commenced his weather report when one of the women said: "It is my duty to warn you that my sister is a confirmed kleptomaniac and that you must watch her closely." After a little while the "klep" moved along to another seat, and the assistant felt it his duty to give her his most vigilant attention. Twenty minutes' time was consumed and no purchase made, and as the women left the shop the assistant flattered himself that the little woman with the Grecian nose had tried it on the wrong merchant. "What made you watch that person so closely?" queried a lady who had observed most of the maneuvering. "Kleptomania!" he whispered. "Is that so? Why, I should have thought the other one needed your eyes the most." She had taken thirty yards of silk and three pounds' worth of fringe.—Exchange.

VAINGLORY.

An Egotistical Trait Which Leads to Hatred, Jealousy and Shame.

It is difficult to judge of vanity or vainglory, how far it is blameworthy; for perhaps if any one knew he was vain, then he would not be so. A philosopher said that if a man should suddenly believe he was moral, he would be moral. But the strength of morality is in this, that no one can believe he is doing well when defying the laws of nature. So, perhaps, it is impossible that one should be vainglorious if he knew that he was so. Therefore, it is difficult to judge of one's self as to whether one be puffed up or not. But, contrariwise is it not a sign of conscious complacency lurking in ourselves to suspect or accuse others of being flushed? If we are not acquainted with vanity, how should we know it so readily, and why feel it if it did not seem to dispute our own self-esteem? We must examine narrowly why conceit is a trait so displeasing to us, for it may be that the self-esteem of another offends because it flaunts a rival and disquiets our self-praise; as La Rochefoucauld avers that "it is our own vanity that makes the vanity of others intolerable." Hence, it has been said well that slander and evil speaking came forth much more from vanity than from malice, for we give credence and currency to an ill trait or bad report, not maliciously to do another harm, but from vainglory, to support our own conceit of ourselves, and show up our claim of superiority.

Vainglory is ridiculous, for it is then a question with what a man compares himself. With a low standard? But he is not made a mountain because his measure is a mole-hill. Or with a high standard? Then certainly he will not vaunt himself. Or if he be among the very great and grand spirits who might boast of themselves, if any might, but who always are those who do not, then must he compare himself with the vastness of knowledge and with the greatness of the earth and of the heavens. But to himself then he will seem to sink into these as if lost or dissolved or disappearing in their glory; and when he remembers himself, it will be only to be humbled and quelled.

To be vain of our own faculty is as foolish as to be conceited over another man's work, for as no man made himself, it is not what he is, but only what he does with his material; that can be praise to him; and even over this he must be humble in proportion as God has dealt him a fine tool with which to work. Humility, dignity and gratefulness are three virtues that go close together, and they frequent the cave of silence.

Interesting to Antiquarians.

An antiquarian discovery was made recently in a field near Dunfermline, Scotland, in the shape of tumuli of large dimensions. Some masons were digging for sand in the vicinity when tumuli were come upon. Already four cists with a large quantity of implements of the Stone Age, and not less than 2,000 years old, have been turned up. The urns were three feet six inches in length by four feet six inches in breadth, and about ten inches in depth. They were all filled with black mould, in which was placed a clay urn about five inches in depth and twenty inches in circumference. There were also flint flakes, arrow-heads, pestles, and other implements inside the cists or near them. The work of excavation will probably now be carried on under the supervision of a gentleman representing the Scottish Society of Antiquaries.—N. Y. Post.

—The people of Ocean Grove speak of the place as a modern Eden. One is not allowed to crack a joke within the gates of that sacred place on Sunday. Not a wheel is turned, not a thing can be bought, even in a drop of milk or a newspaper. People don't think of locking their doors, but leave their pocket-books and other valuable articles lying around in the rooms when they go out, and in full view of the passers-by in the streets. It is wonderful to see 7,000 people trust each other in this place. Suspicion and distrust do not seem to be elements of their natures.—Philadelphia Press.

—A young man of eight years, who had already five brothers, was told one day that he had a sister. —In one of the berths, says a facetious railroad exchange, were a man and his wife. She was one of those nervous, cautious creatures. She kept up her nagging after she got in bed for a long time, but finally she dozed off to sleep and all was quiet in her berth. Everybody was glad. But in less than ten minutes she started up, and everybody in the car heard her groan as she poked him in the ribs and shouted: "William, get up! I know you've left the doors open and forgot to close the kitchen windows."—N. Y. Sun.

HOW GREELEY WAS SOLD.

A Story Told By the Alleged Discoverer of Pike's Peak.

Green Russell, of Lumpkin County, Georgia, went to California in the early days of the gold excitement of that country, made a handsome fortune, returned to Georgia, bought the big Savannah plantation on the Etowah River, in now Dawson County, and quietly retired to his farm, but when Kansas was opened to settlers his restless mind carried him out there. He entered a large body of land on the Big Blue River, from which point he explored the then Territory of Kansas and reached the Rocky Mountains, taking with him tools to prospect for gold.

"Yes."

"Much killing going on about here?"

"Not very much."

"Hang fellows here sometimes, don't they?"

"Sometimes."

"Good opening here for a lawyer, I suppose?"

"Yes, very good."

"They tell me that a lawyer in this country is the boss."

"Well, he seems to do very well."

"Got a good many lawyers out here that don't amount to much, I suppose?"

"Yes, several."

"That makes a good lawyer stand higher."

"Yes."

"A good lawyer has things pretty much his own way."

"Does very well."

"So I have heard. This is a great place for criminal practice?"

"Yes, pretty good."

"A lawyer can stand in with the Governor and make things bowl?"

"Yes, I believe so."

"Glad to hear it. My name is Godson. What is your name?"

"I am the Governor."

Charges Against Presiding Elder Stinchcomb.

At M. E. conference Friday, charges were preferred against Rev. W. R. Stinchcomb, Presiding Elder of the Grand Traverse District, A. J. Russell and Rev. L. Dodds of Grand Rapids. The announcement that charges had been made against these gentlemen created considerable commotion among the delegates. One delegate proposed that a committee be appointed to investigate the charges against W. R. Stinchcomb. Mr. Stinchcomb then arose and said he opposed the appointment of a committee to investigate the charges against him, as it would cause delay and tie him up. He demanded an immediate trial, and wanted to face the men who had anything to say against him, his character or the conduct of the duties imposed on him. He wanted to be tried before the open Conference. He had nothing to fear as his conscience was clear, and he felt convinced that he had done his duty. His remarks seemed to win a good deal of sympathy for him from the delegates, as his statement was told in a straightforward unflinching manner. After considerable discussion it was agreed to appoint separate committees for the trial of the gentleman accused. The committees and the counsels for the defense and prosecution were then appointed by Bishop Warren. What the nature of the charges is is not set forth in the proceedings, but we are of the opinion that Rev. Mr. Stinchcomb will come out clean from the trial.

—Wright Ripley, the new light keeper, has leased the Ely house.

Carlos D. Hampton, father of Charles S., succeeds to the Harbor Springs post-office.

—W. J. Orser, formerly of Charlevoix, has again taken possession of the Pacific House, Petoskey.

—The Lake View House, Elk Rapids, has been closed and it is rumored that Dexter & Noble will turn it into stores.

—Charlie Plass now has enough bouncing boys to equip a four-oared barge, the stroke arriving last week at Mt. Pleasant.

—J. Ward Davis, of Elk Rapids, has been appointed county agent for Antrim of the State board of corrections and charities.

—Mark W. Stevens succeeds Capt. E. P. Allen as Indian agent for this region, thanks to Jerome Eddy's "influence" with the president.

—E. B. Bennett, pastor of the Traverse City Baptist church for the last five years, has resigned, and will go to Grand Rapids or Cincinnati.

—The Fountain City House has just passed the most prosperous year in its history. S. H. Comfort has shown himself to be a No. 1 hotel clerk.

—When it comes to the hair subject, Frank Wood, our tonsorial friend, does not take a rear seat for anyone. That new boy of his is called [illegible] Forrest.

—Mrs. W. A. Smith returned from her Stanwood visit, Saturday.

—A new sidewalk to the pier-light approach would be a noticeable improvement.

—The Progress says Dexter & Noble raised this year 1,663 bushels of wheat on 50 acres and 811 bushels of oats on 13½ acres.

—There is a $10 fine for carving or writing your name on the trestle work leading to the pier light and it will be enforced too.

—The ladies of the Congregational church meet to-day to work upon the new church carpet purchased by Rev. C. F. VanAuken in Lansing, last week.

—When it comes to word-slinging, the architect of the "unpremeditated" column in the Detroit Evening Journal, is the peer of any journalist in the country.

—Spurious coin and counterfeit Canadian $2 bills are in circulation. The bills are of Lord Dufferin issue and are dated June 1, 1878 check letter C, No. 103,707, Toronto issue.

—Mackinac is certain of her $200,000 hotel at last. Prest. Hughart of the G. R. & I. was on the island last week, accompanied by a Detroit architect, arranging for a location.

—For several weeks before the close of the active resort season it is said the two leading hotels of Petoskey, the Cushman and Arlington, did each over $10,000 business monthly.

—There is a strong probability of the removal of the Mancelona iron furnace from Mancelona to St. Ignace. A number of the Mancelona furnace men were there Saturday morning to look up a location.

—James R. Hayes, to whose efficiency as manager the Arlington owes so much of its popularity, will have charge of the Sanford House, at Sanford, a popular resort on the St. [illegible] river, Florida, during the coming winter.

—J. Reed Emrey is in Chicago.

—Sweet's mill removes to East Jordan.

—Bradbeer, the photographer, goes to East Jordan, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

—Preaching at Black's school house next Sunday at 2:30. All are cordially invited.

—The Historical Society will meet Friday evenings hereafter. The new Kate constitution was adopted Tuesday evening.

—J. L. Hurd & Co. appear with a new ad in this issue. The fact that their trade has increased [illegible] the last month over the corresponding time last year, speaks well for the business enterprise and ability of the firm.

—Miss Kate Smith of Flint, has accepted a position in Rosenthal's Petoskey store for the coming year. Mr. Rosenthal is to be congratulated upon securing a lady possessing the pleasing characteristics of Miss Kate. Her mother will also remove to Petoskey.

—Miss Celia Nicholls who is visiting Mrs. Bridge in Fremont, Nebraska, will remain until after the holidays. Miss Minnie Lewis, a daughter of Mrs. John Nicholls, who has spent the past three years in California, will return to Charlevoix with her.

Charlevoix has a band even now that can get away with the Harbor Springs combination, for money or peanuts, if it has got a drum major with a big hat.

—Frank Shanbut and wife removed to Boyne City yesterday. Frank has leased the United States Hotel at that place and will be a full fledged landlord. The superior table that the Shanbuts are noted for setting, will be the means of drawing a good deal of patronage to their hostelry.

—The Detroit Post has been sold to the Nimocks Bros. of the Minneapolis Evening Journal. The Nimocks were formerly of Hillsdale county, Mich., and are staunch republicans. [illegible] a state editor who was born [illegible] this side the Silurian age, they will confer a great favor to the Post readers throughout the state.

—The SENTINEL, a live representative of a most beautiful village says that the improvements in Charlevoix this summer and fall exceed in extent and substantial quality those of any previous season, and then goes on to say: "The foundation of Charlevoix rests upon the rock of natural superiority as a commercial center, and its future growth is as certain as the laws of nature itself."—Daily Telegraph.

—Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co., the pioneer merchants of Charlevoix, will call the attention of their patrons to their stock in new advertisement in next week's issue. The firm is continually growing in public favor, and their reputation for enterprise and fair dealing is a part of their stock in trade. We shall next week publish a review of the establishment. See announcement on 4th page.

—The printing press has made presidents, killed poets, furnished bibles for heathens, and furnished reams with the sandpaper of criticism. It has made worlds get up to recall every morning; given the pulpit lungs of iron and voice of steam. It has set the price of a bushel of wheat, and made the country [illegible] curtailed the power of kings, embellished the pantry shelves and boasted rings, it has converted bankers into paupers, made sawyers of college presidents; it has educated the homeless, and [illegible] the philosopher of his reason, [illegible] to suit everybody.

—It is a fashion among certain ill-bred, and impertinent smart Alecks, to expend their impudence upon waiter girls. It seems from what we hear that the Charlevoix "help" are able to retort effectively when occasion demands. Last week at the Bridge Street House a fellow with more breath than brains, bawled to the girl who had waited upon him, "Kate!" "I say Kate!" "Come and blow this soup, its too hot for my use." The girl marched over to the table [illegible] and then retorted [illegible] seems to be the big[illegible] it yourself." The [illegible] and the smart Aleck [illegible] in silence.—Record.

SHERMAN'S TRIBUTE.

A Criticism, Review and Eulogy on the Life and Deeds of General Grant.

At the recent meeting at Chicago of the Army of the Tennessee General William Tecumseh Sherman delivered the following speech amid repeated cheers and other manifestations of applause:

COMRADES OF THE ARMY OF THE TENNESSEE: Again are we assembled in this goodly city of Chicago, pursuant to the resolution made at our last annual reunion of August 13-14, 1884, at Lake Minnetonka.

This is our eighteenth annual reunion, though twenty eventful years have transpired since the close of the war.

I will not repeat to you the trite expression that our ranks are growing thinner, our hair whiter, and that the eyes which look up to me and which once kindled and flashed at the trumpet's sound now seem sad as though envying the fate of their fine young fellows whose gay and gallant spirits took their flight in the glorious days, the memories of which we have come together to celebrate.

Though in war death makes the battle-field the harvest, yet in peace he heedlessly invades the most sacred premises, taking here the innocent babe, there the gentle, loving wife, again the youth in lusty manhood and the King on his throne. During our last vacation he has stricken from our list of members the very head and front, General Ulysses S. Grant, the same who in the cold winter of 1861-62 gathered together at Cairo, Ill., the fragments of an army, and led them up the Tennessee River—the creator and father of the Army of the Tennessee—took his final leave of earth at 8:18 o'clock on the morning of July 23, 1885, from Mount McGregor, a spur of the Alleghenies in plain view of the historic battle-field of Saratoga.

He had finished his life's work, and had bequeathed to the world his example.

The lightning flash carried the sad tidings to all parts of the civilized earth, and I doubt whether since the beginning there ever arose so spontaneous a wail of grief to bear testimony before high heaven that mankind had lost a kindred spirit and his country men a leader.

We, his first war comrades, concede to the family their superior rights, but claim the next place in the grand procession of mourners.

We were with him in his days of adversity, as well as prosperity, and were as true to him as the needle to the pole.

We shared with him the trials and tribulations, as well as labors and battles, of Henry, Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Iuka and Vicksburg, when that transcendent and most valuable of all victories turned the universal gaze of our bewildered countrymen to the "new star" in the West, which plainly foretold the one who had dispelled the cloud which "low-[illegible]

[illegible]

... that some of our comrades would have preferred Washington City as the burial place of our dead General, but let us examine the facts and precedents.

President Washington is buried at Mount Vernon, Jefferson at Monticello, the Adamses at Quincy, Jackson at the Hermitage, Harrison at North Bend, Polk at Nashville, Taylor at Louisville, Lincoln at Springfield, Garfield at Cleveland, and so also of the army. Scott is buried at West Point, Meade at Philadelphia, Thomas at Troy, McPherson at Clyde, while all of these, or nearly all, have statues or busts in the National Capital. So may it be with Grant. Each city, town and even hamlet may have whatever monument they are willing to erect, but it seems to me better that all should unite and build a strong, solid, simple monument, characteristic of the man, over his grave "on the banks of the Hudson," and then, like Shakespeare, inscribe on it:

"Good friend, for Jesus' sake forbeare
To digg the dust enclosed here;
Blest be ye man yt spares thes stones,
And curst be he yt moves my bones."

Grant needs no monument to perpetuate the memory of his virtues—his weaknesses lie buried with his bones. But if one or more monuments are to be erected to gratify the living, let them be like himself—strong, simple, durable, and in good taste. Better imitate his example: "Accept the situation," and erect one good monument, "on the banks of the Hudson," where he now lies buried in peace, and at rest eternal.

A GROWING HOSTILITY.

Civil-Service Reform and the Attacks Made upon it by Democrats.

It is impossible to read the Democratic papers without noticing, day by day, a growing antipathy to the Civil-Service law. Recently this hostility has become more pronounced and widespread. The failure of the Democratic platforms adopted this year to indorse or countenance the law appears to have emboldened many that heretofore were discreetly silent or mild in their criticism. These expressions of State conventions are taken as indications of the dominant sentiment of the party and the necessity for concealing their honest opinion of an obnoxious law is no longer recognized by the Democratic organs.

The Democracy never had the slightest enthusiasm for the Civil-Service reform measure. They have viewed with too evident impatience every sign that the Administration was disposed to obey the law. They have ridiculed any intimation that the spirit as well as the letter of the statute should be observed. Those appointees of Mr. Cleveland, like Postmaster Jones, of Indianapolis, and Collector Troup, of New Haven, who have had the courage of their opinions and declared boldly their purpose to dismiss Republicans because they are Republicans and appoint Democrats because they are Democrats, have been the Democratic heroes of the hour. From a party animated by such a spirit no sincere inforcement of the law can be expected.

The tactics of the Democratic enemies of the reform now appear to be to arouse and solidify the party's hostility, and bring it to bear with so much force upon the President that he will be compelled to abandon his half-hearted efforts in favor of the law. One method to this end is to goad the Democrats into anger by asserting that the Civil-Service regulations put a stigma upon every Democrat, and by pointing to the Republicans holding offices which by right belong to their opponents. Another method is to bring the Civil-Service examinations into contempt by ridicule and by caricaturing the commission. These are shrewd means to accomplish the purpose in view, and so successful have they been that the sagacity of those who predicted that the President would be compelled to abandon the reform or antagonize his party has been proved already.—N. Y. Tribune.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Delivered at the Brooklyn Tabernacle Sunday, September 27th.

"Stormed and Taken"—Any Plan of Attack On the Strongholds of Sin That Succeeds or Promises Success to Be Favored.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., September 27.—The Tabernacle was crowded this morning and thousands were unable to get seats. The hymn before the sermon was:

Hark the voice of Jesus calling
Who will go and work to-day,
Fields are white, the harvest waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?

After reading the parable of the talents (Matthew xxv.) Dr. Talmage announced his subject as "Stormed and Taken," and took for his text the words:

And Abimelech gat him up to Mount Zalmon, he and all the people that were with him, and Abimelech took an ax in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it and laid it on his shoulder and said unto the people that were with him: What ye have seen me do, make haste, and do as I have done. And all the people likewise cut down every man his bough and followed Abimelech, and put them to the hold, and set the hold on fire upon them, so that all the men of the tower of Shechem died.—Judges ix., 48, 49.

Abimelech is a name malodorous in Bible history, and yet full of profitable suggestion. Buoys are black and uncomely, but they tell where the rocks are. The snake's rattle is hideous, but it gives timely warning. From the piazza of my summer home, night by night, I saw a lighthouse fifteen miles away, not placed there for adornment, but to tell mariners to stand off from that dangerous point. So all the iron-bound coast of moral danger is marked with Saul, and Herod, and Rehoboam, and Jezebel, and Abimelech. These bad people are mentioned in the Bible, not only as warnings, but because there were sometimes flashes of good conduct in their lives worthy of imitation. God sometimes drives a very straight nail with a very poor hammer.

that consumptives should be the least apprehensive of their own condition, while all their friends are urging and beseeching them to be more careful about exposure and overdoing? DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FOR THE CURE OF
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.
The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

THE CITY OF THE LIVING.

In a long vanished age whose varied story
No record has to-day,
So long ago expired its grief and glory,
There flourished far away,

In a broad realm whose beauty passed all measure,
A city fair and wide,
Wherein the dwellers lived in peace and pleasure,
And never any died.

Disease and pain and death, those stern marauders
That mar our world's fair face,
Never encroached upon the pleasant borders
Of this bright dwelling place.

No fear of parting and no dread of dying
Could ever enter there;
No mourning for the lost, no anguished crying,
Made any face less fair.

Without the city's walls Death reigned as ever,
And graves rose side by side;
Within the people laughed at his endeavor,
And never any died.

O happiest of all earth's favored places!
Oh, bliss to dwell therein!
To live in the sweet light of loving faces
And fear no grave between!

To feel no death-damp growing cold and colder,
Disputing Life's warm truth;
To live on never lonelier nor older,
Radiant in deathless youth.

And hurrying from the world's remotest quarters
A tide of pilgrims flowed
Across broad plains and over mighty waters
To find that blest abode.

And there they lived in happiness and pleasure,
And grew in power and pride,
And did great deeds and laid up stores of treasure,
And never any died.

And many years rolled on and saw them striving
With unabated breath;
And other years still found and left them living,
And gave no hope of death.

Yet listen, hapless soul, whom angels pity,
Craving a boon like this,
Mark how the dwellers of the wondrous city
Grew weary of their bliss.

One and another who had been concealing
The pain of life's long thrall,
Forsook their pleasant places and came stealing
Outside the city's wall.

Craving with wish that brooked no more denying,
So long had it been crossed,
The blessed possibility of dying—
The treasure they had lost!

Daily the current of rest seeking mortals
Swelled to a broader tide,
Till none were left within the city's portals,
And graves grew green outside.

Would it be worth the having or the giving,
The boon of endless breath?
Ah, for the weariness that comes of living
There is no cure but death!

Ours were, indeed, a fate deserving pity
Were that sweet rest denied,
And few, methinks, would care to find the city
Where never any died!

—Elizabeth ... Allen, in Boston Transcript.

A CONNUBIAL SKETCH.

How Molly Weston Taught Her Husband a Needed Lesson.

Little Mrs. Weston looked across the table at her liege lord, indignation and wounded feeling quite transforming her usually sunny countenance. Indignation that she, who had practiced economy and kept accurate accounts from childhood, should be charged with an offense entirely antagonistic to her fixed habits. Wounded feeling, that, of all people in the world, her husband should be the one to make the charge he who should know her qualities both for good and evil better than any one else.

This was what he had said: "That money has gone altogether too quickly, and I won't have so much spent next month, if I have to carry the purse myself," and his tone was in no wise agreeable. Upon Mrs. Weston's assertion that none of the money in question had been spent needlessly, while her heart-strings were quivering at the unjust insinuation conveyed in his last words, he added, still more aggressively: "You've got to retrench some how, and if you won't do it I will."

"I think you will have to," said Mrs. Weston, in a quiet, suppressed tone. "After what you have said I certainly shall not 'carry the purse' next month." For this was not the only time of late that monetary affairs had been unpleasantly agitated by Mr. Weston; and, now that he had made a specific charge against her management of the household funds, his wife's spirit rebelled in conscious innocence, and she resolved to take him at his word, and oblige him to control the expenses himself the coming month.

If he had been in straightened circumstances it would have been different; but he was steadily laying by a goodly portion of his earnings, and there was no reason why the outlay of a few more dollars than usual should have occasioned him any uneasiness. Moreover, Mrs. Weston had, from the first, given her husband ample proof of an interest in his welfare almost equal to his own, and had assisted him to his present prosperous condition in more ways than one.

"He ought to know perfectly well," she sadly soliloquized, after John had gone down town without deigning her a farewell word, "that I never spend a cent foolishly. Indeed, I sometimes think we are both too miserly, in our endeavors to provide for a rainy day, and go without things that it would be to our advantage spiritually to have, and which we could really afford to get."

All the morning the little woman carried a sore heart about her manifold duties. She had never employed a servant, although she was far from strong, considering it her duty to do all that was to be done for so small a family as herself and husband. She would say no more about it; but when John brought home the portion of his monthly salary that was devoted to the house, she would not take it into her hands. She had realized all the month that there was an unusual demand on the purse, but she had been unable to lay her hand on any one item and say, "This can be dispensed with." She had a full account of the in-coming and out-goings that she could show, but she knew that John would not be convinced. He would, with the inconsistency at times shown by men, reiterate his statement that too much had been expended, and she must economize. Yet he was not really a stingy man, or what is called a "poor provider." On the contrary, his acts of generosity through life had been numerous, and he was of an unselfish nature, putting himself to inconvenience many times for those who had no claim upon him whatever. His cheery words and pleasant smile were well known upon the street and it is doubtful even if his nearest neighbor would have believed that he was disposed to draw the purse-strings too tightly at home. It was the result, almost imperceptible in its stealthy fastening upon him, of a long and hard struggle against adverse circumstances, when his burdens had been many and his benefits few, and it had been only by practicing rigid economy that he had kept honestly afloat. Now that he could think of the future without misgivings, he was not aware how unhappily the pursuit of the dollar, which is indeed "almighty," had afflicted him. His wife saw it, realized that it was likely to increase with time, and made up her mind that there was only one course which would effectually open his eyes, and that course she would pursue.

John came home to dinner as good-natured as usual, seemingly without a thought of the morning's discussion, and quite ignorant that his wife had been troubled by it the entire day. It is often thus. In the engrossing cares of the outside world the memory of home misunderstandings does not leave the lasting sting in the heart of a husband that is experienced by the lonely housekeeper whose world is inclosed in the four walls of her home, and who pursues her endless rounds of duties unenlivened by the sight of fresh faces, and imbibing no new ideas from contact with fresh minds.

Molly Weston wisely made no allusion to the disputed question, and gave no sign of the perturbation of her spirit, but greeted her husband cheerily, set him down to a repast which was inviting and dainty, without being in the least extravagant. Molly had a knack of making things look inviting, not only at the table, but everywhere about the house. Every nook and corner bore the impress of her tasteful fingers and as John Weston lit his fragrant Havana after a hearty dinner, installed himself in a comfortable armchair before the glowing fire, and unfolded the evening paper, he felt supremely satisfied with himself and all his possessions. Molly was a dear little wife, and contrived to make things wonderfully pleasant. He believed he'd buy her a new silk dress when her birthday came around like the one in Jones' window which she admired so much the other day. He had growled then at "women's extravagant love of dress," although Molly did not ask him right out for it. He felt a complacent sense of doing "the handsome thing" by Molly, as he sat gazing into the fire and picturing to himself how pretty the little wife would look in the grand new dress—almost as pretty as she did seven years ago when he was courting her. She looked a little thin and careworn now—got tired out cleaning house, he guessed—but she'd soon be all right.

The next morning his mood was different. Not but that everything about the house was as it should be, and Molly was sweetly fair in the neatest of wrappers; but somehow he looked through changed glasses. The money question worried him again, and he in turn worried his wife. She must certainly curtail her expenses next month, or they would be running behind. The allowance was liberal, and if Molly only managed it rightly, would always suffice. Molly did not argue with him this time. He had things all his own way; and, when he walked briskly down town, greeting acquaintances here and there, he little dreamed what a disagreeable feeling his words had left to rankle in his wife's bosom all day.

In a few days the end of the month came. John handed Molly the sum outside of the regular fund required to settle the bills due, with another adjuration to avoid so great an expenditure in the future. The next day he proffered his wife as usual the amount set aside for the housekeeping. Molly did not touch it. She dreaded the ordeal, but was determined to go through with it.

"Here, Molly! What are you standing staring at me like that for? Why don't you take this money and put it away?"

"Do you remember, John, what I said to you a week ago?" asked Molly very quietly.

"Jerusalem! what you said to me a week ago! Can a man be expected to remember everything that falls from a woman's lips? What are you driving at, anyhow?"

"One morning when you said there shouldn't be so much spent this month if you had to carry the purse yourself, and I told you that you would have to?" continued Mrs. Weston quietly.

"Oh, bother! is that what you're coming to? You don't pretend to say you're going to stick out about that, do you?" and John laughed.

"No, don't pretend to say it," repeated Molly, with sudden firmness in her voice; "I do say it. John Weston, you have been married to me six years, and if you don't know by this time that your prosperity is my own, it is time you found it out. I consider that you have insulted me by your imputations of extravagance, because I have always done the very best I could to help you along in the world. Now, I wash my hands of the expenses this month. I will not spend a dollar of that money. What comes into this house you will have to purchase, or we will go without. I can stand it if you can."

Molly's figure was drawn up to its utmost height, and her brown eyes flashed indignantly. John gave a whistle of amazement, and stared comically at his wife. This was a new feature of a character which he had supposed himself well acquainted with. When had she ever addressed him like that before?

"Well," said he, breaking the dead silence at last, "here's a pretty to-do! You need not get on such a high horse just because I cautioned you to be economical. It's a pity if a fellow can't say as much as that in his own house without being nipped up in this way. Say, do you mean to take this money or not? I can't stop fooling here all day."

"No, I do not," replied Molly, steadily.

"What in——. How do you suppose we're going to get along if you act like a simpleton? You don't really think I am going to bother my head about kitchen matters, do you? There's the money on the table. You'd better take care of it."

Considerably incensed, John flung down the roll of bills and banged out of the house, believing Molly would not hold out long, but would see the folly of her course, and do the only thing that could be done—go on with her household arrangement as before.

"For if she thinks I'm going to trot around to groceries and meat-shops, she's mistaken," he spluttered to himself in virtuous indignation. "No, I'll go without eating first!"

A heroic resolution which any one knows no man could keep.

He went home that night wondering what kind of a reception would be accorded him, but pretty well satisfied that Molly would not be obstinate, and more than half expecting that she would fly to him, and moisten his shirt-front with tears of contrition for her display of temper.

In this he was disappointed. Molly did not come to meet him at all; neither did she appear angry or sulky. Dinner passed off as usual, after which Molly sat down in her low rocker, with the week's mending, in the coziest manner imaginable. John thought she was conquered, and set out to read the little madam a lecture on matronly propriety; but he didn't just like to spoil the scene of quiet domestic enjoyment, and decided to defer it.

The next morning just as he was going away, Molly looked up from the cups and saucers, and said:

"The money that you left on the table yesterday is in the secretary drawer. There are a number of things needed to-day, which you can get or not, as you like. A roast for dinner, also sugar and coffee, and vegetables of some kind."

The old Nick! She was as mulish as ever, after all! John's temper flew sky high at the idea of being driven. If there's anything in this world that a man can't abide, it's being driven, especially by a woman.

"Well, madam, if you rely on me to get what's wanted, you'll wish you hadn't!" he angrily exclaimed. "I won't be bossed around by any woman!" and slam went the door.

Molly laughed to herself, although tears stood in her eyes. The day wore on. No grocery's boy or butcher's man appeared with the designated articles. John had evidently not ordered them, and it was nearing the dinner hour. Molly looked around to see what her resources were. She did not wish to treat John shabbily, but would set as good a meal before him as she could under the circumstances. If he persisted in his refusal to attend to the orders the next day, she would still do her best with a diminishing larder. She smiled as she thought what incongruous meals they would be.

John exulted all day in a sense of having my lady fast in a corner. Since he positively refused to act the part assigned him, there was nothing left her but acquiescence in a mortifying defeat. He had never known her to be delinquent in conscientious and punctual attention to meals, she would not be now. John had no fears but everything would be all right, as he entered his cosy home. Doubtless Molly would be somewhat sulky over her defeat, but she'd soon get over it.

"Hullo, sir," he said to Molly's pet spaniel, which came frisking into the hall, and stood on tiptoe to welcome him; "hullo Ned, good doggie, where's your mistress?"

Molly heard the good-natured tones, and half shrank from entering the dining-room, whither John had directed his steps. The table was immaculately spread, and the eatables upon it were as advantageously displayed as possible, but John noticed, at the first glance, a difference from the usual appointments.

Just then Molly came in, bearing a steaming teapot, which she deposited in its place beside her plate, as serenely as if she were not almost trembling with excitement.

"Sit down, John," she said pleasantly, "I have done the best I can, but I'm afraid the dinner isn't very good. Luckily there was a little ham left and I broiled it. We shall have to do without vegetables."

Ham for dinner! Who wants broiled ham except for breakfast? And nothing to eat with it but potatoes and bread and butter! Well nigh tongue-tied with astonishment and chagrin, John helped himself to the plain viands. If he had not been so ravenously hungry he would have refused the meal altogether. Really, this was carrying things too far.

"I guess you forgot to put the sugar on the table," said John after awhile, looking around for the wherewithal to sweeten his tea.

"There isn't any. I mentioned it to you this morning, you remember."

No, John had not remembered, or he would have bitten his tongue out before he would have asked for it. Savagely he gnawed his moustache, and pushed his cup away. Molly observed the action, and quietly arose and procured him a glass of water. After appeasing his hunger somewhat he leaned back in his chair awaiting the customary desert, when Molly brought forth a silver cake basket containing half a dozen slices of plain cake left from her lunch the day before.

"I'm sorry I can't offer you either pie or pudding," she said sweetly, "but having no sugar and discovering after you went away that the syrup was out also, I could not make sweets of any description."

"The d——l take your cake!" exclaimed John, jumping up and leaving the table.

She had him on every side. She knew that he detested cake. Never before had he been so angry with his wife. It was more than mortal man could stand, and he was glad that it was the night of the Masonic meeting. If it had not been he would have spent the evening out somewhere or other, for he certainly would not stay in the house with her. Off he went with frowning, sullen brow.

Molly pretended to pay no attention to him; but after he was well out of the house she sank down on a chair and had a good cry. How perfectly wretched people must be, she thought, who wrangled all the time, married only in name, antagonistic in thoughts, tastes and temper. Yet there were many such couples, and she could never be too thankful that such was her fate. John was just as splendid as he could be all but this one failing which was growing upon him so rapidly, and if she could eradicate that she was willing to suffer in the attempt.

The next morning's breakfast was an improvement on the dinner, but tea was substituted for coffee, and John this time drank it unsweetened. There were the daintiest fish balls, rice muffins, toast and jelly. John missed his coffee, but otherwise could not complain of the meal, so his determination not to give way did not falter. But the dinner—he always lunched down town—was simply execrable to his mind. A little boiled salt cod, baked potatoes with milk gravy—they kept a cow or this luxury would have been lacking—and no desert at all. The following meal was fully as meager.

Now John at heart was fond of good living, and secretly enjoyed to the uttermost the tempting viands formerly prepared by his wife. He had no wish to pinch on such things, but he had a vague idea that money was wasted somewhere, hence his unpleasant language to Molly.

On the morning of the third day, he realized that it was useless to attempt to coerce his wife. She evidently meant to keep her word though the heavens fall. He couldn't stand starvation fare any longer, and the wisest way out of the difficulty was to succumb to circumstances and shame his refractory spouse by his amiable and forgiving conduct. She should see that if there was any cloud on the domestic horizon it was not created or enlarged by him; peace and harmony should prevail if possible through his efforts, regardless of the injuries that he had received.

In this magnanimous mood, John quite amiably informed Molly that, for the sake of restoring the household to its usual harmonious condition he would waive his objections, and take charge of the funds for the remainder of the month. To tell the truth, he actually believed that he could get along much cheaper than she did, and they would live just as well. The more he thought about it the more desirous he became to convince Molly, by actual experiment that he was right in making the statements that had offended her so deeply. He knew pretty well what was lacking by this time, and on his way to his work left orders at two or three places to be promptly filled. At night he filled both arms with packages of various sizes and shapes, congratulating himself on the prospect of plenty of good things to eat for the next few days. He was surprised to find himself positively enjoying the position a week or so later. It wasn't so disagreeable as he had imagined it would be for a man to look after the house, and he felt well satisfied with his management. He flattered himself that he secured better bargains than Molly did—women were always easily cheated and he had transferred his grocery trade to a shop across the way from the one she had patronized, a far more respectable looking place, and the proprietors assured him that they sold everything ten per cent. cheaper than any of their neighbors in the business did. Oh, Molly would see, when the bills came in, that he knew what he was about.

Well, to make a practical story short, the bills came in, and the complacent thoughts that had filled John's head went out. The first bill was from the grocer. Molly showed it to John one night, and asked him why he had changed from the usual place of trade. With much self-satisfaction he informed her that he had made quite a saving in that line by doing so.

"It's a pity you never found out that Ketchem & Co. sell everything ten per cent. cheaper than Merritt," he said. "Ten per cent. amounts to something on $20."

"Ten per cent. cheaper! Did you get taken in like that? 'Ketchem' is a good name for the firm, I declare! I could have told you a different story. Just look here! Coffee, forty-five cents a pound, I never pay but thirty-five; sugar, eight pounds for a dollar, I get nine and a half; and so on all through the bill. I must say, John," and she slowly folded the paper, "your grocery experiment is not a success."

This was rather mortifying to the complaisant husband, under the circumstances; but he was doomed to a more ignominious failure.

The next bill was from the butcher. Molly exclaimed outright when she saw the sum total of this.

"Why, John Weston, what have you been doing?" she cried. "This is an outrageously large sum for us two to spend in meat."

"No larger than usual, I guess," replied John. "I'm sure we have'nt had any more on the table. Well, what now?"

John's tone was rather testy, as Molly plumped down in a chair, the picture of amazement.

"If you haven't ordered sirloin cuts every time we've had a stew, and almost as good for soups! No wonder the bill is large. You great stupid, don't you know that folks always buy the cheaper meats for boiling? My soup bones cost me just ten cents, and when we have them every day as we do there's considerable difference between ten cents and thirty."

John looked dumbfounded. His carefully planned castles were tumbling down about his head.

"No, I didn't know," he muttered. "How should I know? This is what you get by forcing me to do your work."

Molly might have reminded him that he had been very confident a month before that he could do this part of her work more economically than she did, but she refrained.

Other mistakes in the list were pointed out, and, by the time that the sundries, which had been procured and paid for from day to day as John thought circumstances demanded, were reckoned up, the man was thoroughly crest-fallen.

"Just double what I usually spend for odds and ends," Molly remarked. "You've brought home a good many things, my dear, that were not especially needed."

Molly had not been unaware throughout the month how matters were tending. She had been amused over the ignorant cuts and lavish supply of what were considered extras, and her astonishment on reading the respective accounts had been far from genuine. She had allowed John to exercise his own judgment entirely, knowing that it would not seriously hamper them if they did pay dearly, in a pecuniary sense, for this experiment.

"Well," declared John, after the bills were paid, "I didn't go over the bounds, anyway, as you did last month and that's proof conclusive that you wasted money somewhere. I don't see what you could have done with it, especially as you claim to have made better bargains all around."

"My dear boy," said Molly, "you are not out of the woods yet; you have forgotten several important items. There isn't a stick of wood in the yard. I've been using chips for the last three days; you have not paid for the Daily News; we are still owing for the butter sent us from Hone Farm, and those two barrels of apples"——

"Good Lord, don't mention another thing!" cried John in desperation. "The old Harry's to pay! Who could have foreseen there'd be a thousand things to get? It's buy, buy, buy, all the time, if one keeps house. But I'm sure you didn't have to make any such outlay last month. Things always come in a heap."

"My dear, I can soon dispel that illusion by reminding you that I purchased a barrel of flour, a supply of fuel and oil, paid a doctor's bill of ten dollars, newly upholstered your easy chair, and expended money for several other things outside the regular bills. Now, John, I think you must be convinced that my management of the household purse is at least equal to your own, and that you can entrust it to me in the future, secure in the knowledge that no one, I repeat it, John, no one would strive more arduously than your wife to faithfully and judiciously perform the duties of a true helpmate. Aren't you sorry, John, dear, that you hurt my feelings as you did?"

Affectionate little Molly knelt by her husband's side, passed her arms around his neck, and laid her soft cheek upon his shoulder.

What did John do? Well, John Weston was a pretty good sort of a man, as I told you in the first place, and he did just what was right for him to do—what either husband or wife ought to do when differences arise—candidly acknowledged his error, and asked forgiveness therefor. You do not need to be told that Molly did not withhold the desired boon. She was only too delighted to reinstate the happy, peaceful routine of existence which had prevailed in the early days of their married life, before John had become imbued with the love of money and suspicious of its expenditure. He was cured of the growing propensity, and thenceforth made Molly's path much easier than it had been.

At home, as well as abroad, John Weston was known as a genial, thoughtful and generous gentleman, as the result of Molly's eminently practical experiment.—Clara S. Brown, in Ballou's Monthly.

BIRD LORE.

A Fancier's Discourse on the Voices and Plumage of Popular Pets.

"Are many pet birds sold now?" was asked.

"More than ever before; but I can't say just how many. There are nearly a hundred bird stores in the city. There were not half that number five years ago. There are more canaries sold than any other kind of birds. They are not the best singers, but they are very pretty and they are easily kept. The best singing canaries come from Germany, where they are trained. We sometimes receive as much as ten dollars for a fine singer. Some are sold as low as two dollars.

"The best singer of the feathered tribe is the American mocking bird. He is the acknowledged king of them all. The smartest of those birds come from Virginia and North Carolina, where they are caught while young. They are very hard to raise until they get to be nine months or a year old. After that they give little trouble. They begin to sing when they are a year old and are in their prime at four years. They will live by proper attention for ten years, and I have known them to attain thirteen years. The young birds are secured at this season of the year and in the spring. The females are worthless as pets, as only the males sing. I have known a mocking bird to sell for eighty dollars. The average price for a good singer, however, is twenty-five dollars."

In a big cage was a North Carolina red bird. "He," said the attendant, "is valued for his plumage. He is not of a musical turn, and only gives forth a shrill whistle." This bird had a blood-red body, with black head and the tip of the wings were black. "They average in price," said its owner, "about $5."

"How many kinds of birds talk?"

"Let's see—there is the starling, the magpie, the raven, the parrot and the cockatoo, which is in reality a species of the large parrot family. Does the crow talk? Yes, once in awhile a crow can be found which, with hard and careful training, can be taught to say one or two words. But we don't count him with the talking birds. I sold the mate to that cockatoo you see there to a gentleman last week for $100, and I would not take much less for this one." The bird stood dozing on a perch, a perfect picture of grace and contentment. He was almost as white as snow, except his head, which was a bright yellow. He was much larger than an ordinary-sized parrot and when he opened his eyes he looked very wise.

"We divide birds into two classes," explained the attendant. "There are hard bills and soft bills, and each class has its kind of food. Our hard bills eat seed and the soft bills eat a soft preparation which is made of honey and canary seed. We have birds here from every clime. There are the love birds, which are parroquets from South America, and those birds over there are from Africa. You see they haven't much beauty about them and they can't sing.

"None of the Africans sing. The little cut-throat has rather a soft whistle, but that is all. There is the English blackbird, which belongs to the singing family. We sell them for eight dollars and upward. The parrot family is very large. The best parrots are of a grayish color and they are brought from Africa. Each kind of a bird requires a special kind of care. It is not necessary to clean the cages every day of the smaller birds, but great care should always be taken that their perches are kept clean or the birds will get corns on their feet. Didn't know that birds could get corns? Certainly they can. That comes from their standing on a rough perch. We are often called on to doctor sick birds and find them suffering with corns. They soon come all right after the perches are cleaned thoroughly. Painted cages are bad for birds, for the reason that the little songsters sometimes peck the paint off and get sick from the effects of it."—Philadelphia Times.

STAINING ROOM FLOORS.

How the Work Can Be Done Neatly and at Small Expense.

The practice of staining board floors a darker tint than their original color, or to represent woods of greater cost, is now almost universal, and is the first step toward that thing of beauty, a high-art drawing room. A floor stained to represent dark old oak is preferred by many. The mixture for accomplishing this is sold at all paint shops, and comes in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, varying light to dark. Light polished floors are much preferred at present, although a great deal depends on the condition of the boards. If the boards are smooth and fine-grained, a satinwood or pitch-pine stain and polish is preferred; but if the floor is old or rough it is folly to attempt any stain except that of dark oak or dark mahogany.

Pour the liquid into a saucer, dip the brush in, saturate thoroughly, rub evenly over the wood and dry instantly with a soft cloth. To insure success this must be done quickly and evenly. For the ultra-fashionable floor, which is a pale shade of oak, sized and varnished, buy the desired amount of raw sienna powder, mixed with water, and rub into the boards as directed above. For mahogany staining make a mixture containing half a pound of madder, two ounces of logwood chips boiled in a gallon of water; brush this over the wood while hot. When dry go over this with a solution of pearl-ash, two drams to one quart of water, size and polish. If a redder shade is required it can be produced by smearing the surface with a strong solution of permanganate potash, which is left on for a longer or shorter time, according to the shade required; in most cases five minutes will be enough. The wood is then carefully washed, dried and polished in the ordinary way. A good cheap oak stain is made of equal parts of American potash and pearl-ash, two ounces of each to a quart of water. As American potash is a solvent, care should be taken to keep it from the hands, and an old brush should be used as it is no good afterward.—Philadelphia Call.

THE EDITOR'S MISTAKE.

I hear a footstep in the hall,
A knock comes at my door,
And fearful thoughts my brain appall—
I've heard that step before.

A man comes boldly in the room—
His gaze I can not shun—
And everything seems robed in gloom;
I feel he is a dun.

"The editor? Pray tell me, sir,
Can I see him to-day?"
I hate to say the editor
Has gone far, far away.

"He's gone abroad—to Jericho—He'll not come back," I say.
"His health was very bad, you know;
'Tis likely he will die."

"I'm sorry, sir," the man replies;
"I came a bill to pay."
And then unheeding my surprise:
"I'll bid you, sir, good-day."

A KANSAS TORNADO.

How a Kansas Granger Came Into Possession of a Thrifty Farm by Way of an Aerial Journey.

"Tornadoes, did you say?" remarked a tall man whose bronzed and freckled hands gave evidence of an intimate acquaintance with the plow-handle. "Well, if I haven't seen a tornado you can sell me for a yearling. Why, stranger, I was raised where tornadoes grow. I used to play back of their pasture ground. I've done everything with a tornado but milk it, and as to cyclones, why, I take to them the way a boy does to circuses. I live in Kansas when I'm at home. What place? Well, that is rather hard to say. I moved out there from Johnson County, Ind., in '65. We settled in Cedar County, up in the northern part of the State. I bought a horse, built a shack and squatted on one hundred and sixty acres of the prettiest land the rain ever beat on. That was in June. I had just got out of the army and I had my pay to start in with. Well, we had a hard time of it, stranger, that first year. We lived mostly on hog and hominy. But when I began cutting the first crop of wheat the next summer, I began to feel like a millionaire.

"One July night," continued the tall man, "I had my wheat all stacked ready for thrashing, and went to bed feeling as rich as if I owned the whole country. About midnight, as near as I can recollect, I heard a clap of thunder and then the house began to rock like a willow tree. Then everything was quiet for a little while and I went to sleep. Early the next morning my wife got up and looked out of the window.

"'John,' said she, 'where on earth is your wheat?'

"'What,' said I, jumping out of bed. 'What's that you say?'

"'Where's the wheat?'

"I looked out the window, too, and stranger, I saw the most remarkable sight I ever saw. There wasn't a grain of wheat within a mile of me. There wasn't a remnant of my barn. My barn-yard was gone, the house, the cows, and even the pigs were gone. I got dressed and walked out doors. The place was changed, stranger, changed in a single night. My house was setting in a garden by the side of a creek. There was a new barn in the yard, some red cows—mine were white—some black pigs—mine were spotted—and instead of wheat there was the all-fired-est stack of corn stalks you ever looked at. I thought at first I was dreaming, and asked my wife to kick me, but I wasn't. About breakfast time some neighbors came in and asked where Mr. Jones was. I never heard of him.

"'He used to live here,' they said. 'He lived here last night.'

"Then I told them of the crash and the rocking, and they said I must have been struck by a tornado. I asked where I was; They said I was in Izard County, which was fifty miles south of where I went to bed. Sure enough, they were right. The strangest part of it was the house wasn't hurt a bit. The roof even didn't leak. The neighbors said that it was a visitation of Providence, and the place belonged to me. But that wasn't all, stranger. About a year afterwards I heard from some of my old neighbors that Jones' house had been moved right up to where my old house stood by the same blasted wind. We both concluded to stay where we were and avoided any trouble on that account. I've been away three months and can't exactly say where I do live now. But I expect I am still at the old stand."—*N. Great Feat in Railroading.

"You can talk all you please about big feats in railroading," said a Western conductor, "but I guess we can beat 'em all. Our track men have been engaged for some time in straightening out the track and shortening curves. Our Superintendent is a hustler, I want you to know, and the other day he determined to reduce the distance between Smithville and Union five miles. He did it, and in one day, too."

"In one day?"

"Yes, sir, in one day. It isn't every road that can afford improvements of that magnitude. But our line is making money now, and the Superintendent said we had used that long track long enough."

"But how did he manage to do the job so quick? Must have taken several thousand men."

"Oh, no; one man did the whole thing. It took him about ten minutes. You see, when our road was first built traffic was light and profits doubtful. So the distance between stations was put down on the time cards at from one to five miles greater than it actually was. Of course all passengers were charged three cents a mile according to the schedule distance. Our directors declared many a dividend on the strength of these extra miles."—Chicago Herald.

THE CONVERSATIONALIST.

He Tells a Funny Story of the Fellow Who Wrote—What's Its Name?

"You remember that fellow who wrote—what's its name? You know he made some money on one of the Western railroads; I forget what they call it."

"Well, what of it?"

"Why, not long ago he was in—what's that town in Wisconsin? You know."

"Don't mind the name of the town; what did he do?"

"What the deuce is the name of that town? A big policeman came from there. You know him. Well, this fellow——"

"Which fellow?"

"I can't think of his name. It's a good joke, and I nearly died when I heard it. He'd come up from that big plantation in Louisiana, kept by—by—who's that big banker in St. Louis? The man who built a line of steamboats from Keokuk to—to—I'll think of the name in a minute—the town at the mouth of—you know that town in Arkansas. Anyway, he'd come up on the—that road that runs at the west bank of the Mississippi from that place opposite Cairo. Consolidated with the Cairo & Fulton Road. What's the name of that line?"

"Don't know. Never was in that country. What did your man do that was so funny?"

"Why, he'd come up from that plantation on this line to the town in Wisconsin, and struck for the—that—hotel on the corner of Jefferson and that other street. Named after a Frenchman. Strange I can't remember it."

"Never heard of it. Don't know anything about it. Go on with your story."

"Well, he got there and perpetrated the best pun you ever heard on the landlord's name. The landlord got off a pretty good thing on this man's name, but I can't remember what it was. Anyhow, this man asked the landlord: 'Why are you like an insurance company'—he named the insurance company, but I've forgotten what it was—'Why are you like an insurance company?' Give it up?"

"Yes, I give it up."

"Well, sir, the answer is the funniest thing you ever heard. It broke me all up when I heard it."

"Why, if I could remember the name of the landlord, I'd know in a moment. Who's that fellow that invented the—pshaw, that machine for making—what're they called? You understand, something about stairrods."

"Never heard of him."

"It's the same name except the last syllable. Funny I don't catch it."

"Is that all of your story?"

"Why, yes. You see if I could remember my man's name, and the insurance company, and the landlord's name, I'd bust you right open with the best thing you ever listened to."

Homes for the Wards of the State

TO THE CITIZENS OF CHARLEVOIX CO.:

The writer begs leave to call the attention of persons resident in this vicinity, to the desire of the Trustees of the State School at Coldwater, of the Reform School at Lansing and Industrial School for girls at Adrian, to place the children and youth under their charge in families. The former institution has children of both sexes from three years old. Some are orphans, others are abandoned of their parents, or are cast on the State by the destitution of their natural guardians. Only sound and healthy youth are received, with such occasional exception as cannot be avoided.

The Reform School is indeed for criminal boys. Yet these boys are not generally depraved in the emphatic sense. Many of them have been guilty of no more than boys of respectable family to whom no special disgrace attaches. They are generally wide awake lads, who only need a good home and a prudent hand. The same remarks apply to the girls in the Industrial School. There are undoubtedly girls whom it were wrong to place in any respectable family, but these are not the girls for whom the managers seek places. Girls are sent there to rescue them from dangerous environment or who have fallen more from the wickedness of others than from any bent towards evil. More than 50 have been put out, and very few have been returned.

So far in this county three indentured children have been placed from the State Public School report for the year ending Sept. 30, 1884. For some years the county agent of Grand Traverse county found no opportunity to place children, but in the last year he has gone several times to Coldwater and brought away children, until now there must be at least twenty-five out in that county.

We ask the citizens of Charlevoix county to confer with the County Agent, Mr. John S. Dixon and learn more about these boys and girls. There must be families where they could be useful and have the training they need.

GEO. D. GILLESPIE,
Chairman Bd. Corrections and Charities.
Grand Rapids, July 28, '85.

After my return from Ohio, about the 19th of October, I shall be happy to confer with any heads of families, who may desire to receive to their guardianship any of those "Wards of the State" referred to in the communication of Bishop Gillespie.

Marion Notes.

The Mutual Improvement Society of Marion held their annual meeting at Black's school house on the evening of Sept. 29th, and elected officers for the year as follows:

Mr. Wm. Black, Sr., President.
Mr. John Ward, Vice President.
Mr. Jos. G. Reed, Secretary.

Society will meet again Tuesday evening, October 13th, with a full program All invited.

Mrs. S. A. Cook, of Frankfort, Ind., is visiting her brother, Jos. G. Reed, of Marion. Mrs. Cook is the wife of an enterprising farmer of the fertile county of Clinton, Ind. She has a very favorable opinion of Charlevoix and surroundings, and is surprised after passing through hundreds of miles of country south of here where vegetation is laid low by the frost, that here around Charlevoix nothing is touched, even tomatoes and squashes.

Marine.

The Independent reports that the loss sustained by the schooner Mary Hattie will fall on Mr. Constable, on account of his having failed to keep a tug ready to tow her into safety.

A brother of Joe Beauvais' is captain of the Grand Haven life saving crew which for their efforts in saving the crew of the schooner Annie Tidlen last week were presented with a purse of $[illegible] by the owners.

The success of the well named "palace steamers" of the Detroit and Cleveland Transportation Company for the past two years, have demonstrated the superior executive ability of General Passenger Agent Whitcomb. The steamers of this line are unquestionably the finest on the lakes.

Capt. J. Penfold, of the tug D. P. Hall, of Frankfort, has been in town this week looking over the ground, and has decided to remove here with his tug next spring to do a general towing business. The Hall is one of the best tugs on the lakes. She is 75 feet long, with 16 feet beam, depth of hold 9 feet. She is driven by an 18x22 engine, and is first class in every respect. Capt. Penfold is sole owner, and is a courteous gentleman.

Free Advertising.

One of the most potent factors in bringing summer visitors to this region, is the advertising put forth by the various northern Michigan railroad and steamer lines. The following good send off is taken from the hand book of the Detroit, Lansing & Northern R. R.:

"Charlevoix is 18 miles from Petoskey and is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine River. Pine River is a quarter of a mile long and connects Round Lake and Lake Michigan. Charlevoix summer resort is south of the main channel between Round and Pine Lakes. Chicago summer resort is on the upper side of the main channel connecting Round and Pine Lakes.

These resorts share in all the climatic advantages of Northern Michigan. The cool refreshing breezes from the lakes are most invigorating. Little or nothing is known of summer's sultry heat, or of the close muggy air of dog days, so debilitating in most places. The nights are cool and so conducive to "balmy sleep tired nature's sweet restorer." But this local ity enjoys some advantages of climate peculiar to itself. Most summer resorts, being situated on the shores of the lake, with only the land behind them, are as often subject to land as to lake breezes, and therefore do not escape sultry days. However, this is not the case here, situated between Lake Michigan and Pine Lake, with the depression of land through which Pine River runs forming a natural air channel, these resorts are never without a fresh breeze from one lake or the other. The cooler breezes from Lake Michigan blow during the day time, when most needed. These breezes are always purified as well as cooled by contact with large bodies of water. The situation is not unlike that of the famed Newport, lying between the Atlantic and Narragansett Bay. There are no low and marshy lands in the region to taint the air with miasma and breed annoying mosquitoes. A more fortunate combination of those circumstances which tend to make a summer resort desirable can scarcely be imagined. Those who have passed one or more summers in this locality tempering their strength in its salubrious climate and thus securing a new lease of life are enthusiastic in its praise.

Few localities enjoy such excellent facilities for boating. Through the summer, Pine Lake is usually as placid as a river, while Round Lake, lying like a sparkling gem between the resorts and the village, and protected from the winds by the encircling hills, is always safe for small row boats. Those who crave the more thrilling sport of yachting may take a fifteen mile sail up Pine Lake, or turning their prow westward glide out of the harbor into Lake Michigan's broad expanse, and thus dance over the waves along the wooded shore, or push out into the lake until the place of starting has dropped behind the horizon thus securing all the effects of a sail in mid-ocean.

The whole Charlevoix region is famous for its excellent fishing grounds. Isaak Walton himself would have revelled in his favorite sport on the lakes and along the rivers and streams that are found in this locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch and herring abound in the lakes, while the gamey speckled trout, the fisherman's chief delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne Rivers, as well as the several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula have acquired so famous a reputation for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne. Sportsmen come hundreds of miles every year to enjoy the rapture of capturing these lively beauties, and even though they may fail to come in the season for a great catch, so enchanting is the scenery along the rivers, so invigorating is the air of this climate, and so novel the experience of camp life, while pursuing their piscatorial sports, that none return without feeling richly repaid for their trip. Those who spend the season at these resorts have the advantage, however, of sportsmen who come to try the pastimes for a few days only, as they are enabled to choose the best days in which to gratify their angling tastes.

Pine Lake is a beautiful sheet of water 20 miles long. About 5 miles east it divides into two arms; the south arm extending south, and at the finger end receives the famous trout stream Jordan River. The scenery about these lakes is grand and pleasant; sport for days may be had in and around Charlevoix.

"I Die, But Still I Last."

This cut represents George H. Van Pelt, the largest die and last manufacturer in the world, and a resident of Norwood in this county at least seven months in the year. He says he is a little disfigured, but still in the ring. There can be no doubt but that he is in the ring, judging from the familiar manner with which he was greeted by the large boot and shoe manufacturers at the St. Louis Exposition. To his credit be it said that he treats the smallest beginners with the same respect and consideration extended to the oldest in the trade.

The "disfiguration" probably alludes to his past sickness, for in the years 1883 and 1884 he was in a most precarious condition. The year he has spent in the woods of northern Michigan, however, proved the most profitable of any year of his business career, for under the management of his manager, Mr. W. J. Fleming, his business kept good pace with the times. This gave Mr. Van Pelt an opportunity for getting out blocks. It is safe to say that no manufacturer of lasts has so large a stock of blocks as has Mr. Van Pelt, nor for such reasonable prices, either. Mr. Van Pelt's extensive factory, the largest in the world, where are made over seventy lasts of different sizes from one model, is located in Chicago. His cheery face is a familiar one upon the streets of Charlevoix.

The M. E. ladies give a supper at the church, this evening.

—The Landie factory at Alba has shut down until about February 1st.

—Miss Katie Packard of Leland will have the East Jordan school this winter.

—A. K. Dougherty is building a fine residence on Court House Square, Elk Rapids.

—We wish our agricultural friends would report to us any unusually large yields of grain.

—C. M. Barre, representing the Hon. C. P. Mitchell, a Hillsdale capitalist, was in town Thursday on business.

—Business is booming all along the line. The wholesale price on nails is one dollar a keg higher than in July last.

—The Historical Society meet at the Bridge Street House parlors next Friday evening. The annual election of officers occurs at that time.

—John L. Wood of Cleveland, Ohio, has sold 50,000,000 feet of standing pine in Kalkaska county to John Torrent of Manistee for $125,000.

—Ralph Enos, the son of Prof. Enos who was here some months ago in the interests of the Home Life Insurance Co., is teaching school near Cadillac.

—Dexter & Noble have received between two and three thousand bushels of grist work from Beaver Island parties within the last few days.—Progress.

—The Upright hill is being graded.

—State and Mason streets are being gravelled.

—Several Indian children are attending the Elk Rapids school.

—James Ackert and Leslie Giddings left for a visit at Pontiac, yesterday.

—Chas. Gagnon and family of Leland will soon remove to Charlevoix.—Herald.

—Frank Hines was in Grand Rapids last week ordering his Holiday goods of a Chicago agent.

—We regret to state that our East Jordan friends lacked $[illegible] of paying the expenses of their recent fair.

—Traverse City people have let the contracts for a $20,000 new school house, to be ready for occupancy July 15, 1886.

—Bellaire is taking steps to organize a military company, and Charlevoix could raise an unusually good company with a little effort.

—The Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. have a new advertisement in this issue. A visit to their mammoth store at Traverse City is always an event of interest.

—"God wasted mud when he made him," is what Bob Burdette says of the man who owes a subscription to a newspaper and will instruct the postmaster to send it back "refused."

—Dr. Crouter left Monday to attend the Detroit meeting of the state Pharmaceutical society of which he is president. Mrs. Crouter left at the same time to visit relatives in Canada.

—The Kalkaska county fair closed Wednesday. The weather was unusually propitious, but a lack of interest on the part of the people made the fair much less a success than it ought to have been.

Robt. Frost's wheat yielded over 21 bushels to the acre; his oats 33 bushels and barley 40. The ground from which the crop was grown was cleared last spring, and, considering everything, the yield is considered a good one.—Mancelona Herald.

—A. J. Shakespeare gets the Kalamazoo postoffice.

—The Board of Supervisors are in session at East Jordan.

—Stove wood is selling at Mancelona at 70 to 80 cents per cord.

—A Kalkaska county farmer found a 5 pound agate on his land last week.

—Mancelona will retain the charcoal kilns but the furnace goes to Mackinaw.

—Capt. Hodge, Inspector of hulls, and also the inspector of boilers for this district have been "removed."

—William, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Miller, died last Thursday morning, aged eight months.

—Frank Craine left Friday for Cadillac where he will spend the winter. The best wishes of a large circle of friends go with him.

—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shepard of Boyne City were in town yesterday, the guests of Mrs. Shepard's parents, Capt. and Mrs. Edwards.

—Dr. Coolman and family of Torch Lake, moved to Ravenna, Ohio, yesterday. Mrs. Coolman has been the guest of Mrs. Price for the past week.

—Popular George, the clothier, will come out next week with a new ad, announcing great bargains in clothing. Call and see him and you won't be sorry.

—There is a talk that L. D. Bartholomew, of Charlevoix, will go to Florida with the steamer Clara Bell, and that he will tow the schooner Fair Play.—Bellaire Breeze.

—The Leelanau Enterprise says that outside parties have nearly effected arrangements for the purchase of the beautiful Northport Point, and intend making it a fine summer resort.

—The Boyne City clothing and dry goods house have a new ad on our 8th page. The proprietor is a sound business man from every appearance and our readers up the lake have a fine opportunity to buy good goods.

—Nelson White, a compositor in the Charlevoix SENTINEL office, made a visit to this place last week and proceeded, with the assistance of the Herald compositor, to decorate the municipality with vermilion. He left Tuesday evening for Charlevoix.—Mancelona Herald.

—The Young Peoples Christian Association of the M. E. church, Charlevoix, was organized last Wednesday evening. The purpose of the association is for religious and literary improvement. The officers are; President, Joseph Goss; Secretary, William Stover; Treasurer, Miss Sadie Miller. Regular meetings on Tuesday evening and Sabbath evening at 6 o'clock.

—Speaking of the death of Mrs. Lewis Miller, the Traverse City Herald says: "One by one, and of late rapidly, the pioneers of northern Michigan are passing away and soon all those who suffered the hardships and endured the trials of frontier life to make easier the work of the tens of thousands who have come after, will be gone. Let us honor them while we may."

—The SENTINEL received yesterday the largest line of stationery that has ever been ordered at one time, and at the lowest prices. We have cut our prices on all kinds of job work to much below the prices received in the southern part of the state, for the same grade of work. We want your patronage and will promise you the best satisfaction. Come and see our stock, styles and prices.

We like to hear a man refuse to take his home paper and at the same time sponge on his neighbor for the reading of it. We like to hear a man complain when asked to subscribe for his home paper that he takes more papers than he reads now, and then go around and borrow his neighbor's, or loaf around until he gets all the news from it. We like to see a man run down his home paper and then beg for a favor in the editorial line. We like to see a merchant neglect to advertise in his home paper and try to get a share of the trade a newspaper brings to the town. We like to see this; it looks economical, thrifty, progressive and—cheeky.—Charlotte Leader.

—Among the new laws that have just come into effect in this State is one requiring all druggists to be registered, and that all persons not in that business and desiring to enter it must first go before a board of examiners and obtain a certificate of fitness to mix and compound medicines. The State Board of Pharmacy is composed of O. Eberbach of Ann Arbor (President), Geo. McDonald of Kalamazoo, Jacob Jesson of Muskegon (Secretary), James Vernor of Detroit, and F. H. Van Emster of Bay City. Another law makes it a misdemeanor for any person to attempt to defraud any proprietor of an inn or hotel out of the value of food or accommodations; the penalty being imprisonment for sixty days or a fine not exceeding $100, or both, at the discretion of the court. By another law it is required that persons employing female help in any factory, workshop, warehouse, store or hotel, shall provide suitable seats for the use of such female employes, which they may use when not necessarily engaged in the active duties of their employment.

—A sister of the famous Ignatious Petoskey, who died last spring, is now at Harbor Springs and claims to be 115 years of age.

—Rev. D. H. Ellsworth, a preacher from the eastern part of the state, will supply the M. E. pulpit at East Jordan, the coming year.

—Rev. Mr. Putman will reside at Ironton and fill the M. E. pulpit. He will preach next Sabbath at the Johnson school house at 3 o'clock p. m.

—Come to the song practice at the M. E. church next Saturday evening from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock. Hymnals will be furnished to all who are not supplied.

—Preaching next Sabbath morning and evening at M. E. church. Sabbath school at 11:30 o'clock. Young peoples' meeting at 6 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended.

—Our hay fever readers will be interested in the correspondence on our 8th page "from one of the victims," a pleasant New Hampshire lady who has unbounded faith in Charlevoix.

—Ambitious tourists who think every locality is honored by their names carved where all may see it, will be sorry to learn that a $10 fine awaits all who thus deface the trestle work leading to the new Charlevoix lighthouse.—Telegraph.

Have You Heard From Ohio?

Yesterday's Ohio election was a grand victory for the Republican party.

Advices this morning state that Judge Foraker's plurality for governor will reach 5,000, and that a Republican legislature is elected.

The Buckeye state has done herself proud. The prestige of the national and state administrations, the prohibition element, and the "oily" arguments of the Payne democracy have all been overthrown.

The Resorts.

Henry Bishop and wife and F. W. Wilcox returned home yesterday.

Mrs. Geo. Bardeen and daughter returned home Monday. They went by way of Traverse City to visit friends.

H. B. Wier, with the assistance of warden Kelley, is doing some fine grading in rear of his cottage on the resort park.

Mrs. Sutliff returned to Norwalk, O., Monday. Before going she made noticeable improvements in her cottage grounds.

R. H. Glover of Louisville, Ky., has bought five shares of the Charlevoix summer resort stock of Geo. E. Bardeen and lot 21 and ½ of 20 and will build a cottage next spring.

Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co.

The summer of 1872, Egbert Carpenter arrived in Charlevoix from Wisconsin, with small capital and established a modest mercantile business. His trade increased in keeping with the growth of our town and county, and soon after L. D. Bartholomew associated himself in the business, and the firm became known as Carpenter & Bartholomew. With increased capital, and the added experience of Mr. B., their trade was extended, buildings enlarged, and docks built.—Mr. Carpenter however retaining sole ownership of the real estate, and docks. Later on Harrison Belford, and still later, Byron W. Miller clerks in the establishment, were added to the firm, and the present style of C. B. & Co. was adopted. The firm went largely into shipping, and, at this date, the establishment besides being the oldest mercantile house in Charlevoix, now in existence, is one of the most financially solid in northern Michigan. They have a fine line of harbor dockage and their building is of two stories with large basement. Below, are stored the heaviest articles of provision stock. Their main floor is always well stocked with fresh groceries, and their line of dry goods, boots and shoes and clothing is always full. Above, a line of common furniture is stored. In short there are few articles of farm or household use that cannot be found in their establishment.

Why Not Move It To Charlevoix

There is a strong talk of removing the Mancelona iron furnace to St. Ignace.

The above, from the Detroit News, is only partially correct. Mr. Otis confided to his friends some time ago that a removal from Mancelona had become a necessity, but Mackinaw City—not St. Ignace—is the objective point. Mr. Otis' determination to leave Mancelona is not due to any action on the part of the people of Mancelona nor to a waning of his regard for the place; on the other hand, he claims that a change in location is forced upon him by the uncompromising position assumed by the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway. Besides a considerable saving in the transportation of the ore, a removal to Mackinaw City means water communication with many of the Western iron markets during the summer and competing lines for all winter shipments. Mr. Otis will continue to maintain his coal kilns at Mancelona but the furnace and all which pertains thereto will undoubtedly be removed to the Straits before the close of another season.—Grand Rapids Tradesman.

Got 'em Again.

It is stated on good authority that Boyne City will have a railroad within a year.—Boyne Statesman.

We Told You So.

No portion of the United States is blessed with finer autumn weather than Northern Michigan. The best and most beautiful part of the whole year is just missed by the resorters.—Petoskey Record.

Our Schools.

The enrollment in our public schools up to date is 230, as follows:

High School, Prof. Enos, 45.
Grammar Room, Anna Cooper, 45.
Intermediate, Alice Cochran, 60.
Primary, Flora Nelson, 80.

Argument For One Cent Postage.

Notwithstanding the reduction in different classes of postage the receipts of the Detroit postoffice for the sale of stamps, postal cards and stamped envelopes for September are $25,119.46, exceeding that of one year ago by $2,334.46.

A Trifle off.

The Wilson hoop company will be ready to start their branch establishment at Charlevoix Nov. 1. The building is about completed, and the machinery is being shipped to its destination from West Bay City via the Mackinaw division of the Michigan Central railroad.—Detroit News.

The Nicholls' Mill Cut.

The saw mill will shut down for the season, this week. The following is the cut. By reference to our table of shipments, it will be found that this mill has manufactured one sixth of all the lumber shipped from the Pine Lake Region this year

Hardwood	[illegible] feet.
Pine and Hemlock	[illegible] "
Cedar in Sawlogs	[illegible] "

To The Front.

The SENTINEL will receive next week for its press and job rooms, a new two-horse power "Acme" engine and boiler.

While this involves an outlay of $300 on our part, we are confident that our patrons who believe in rewarding enterprise, will not only be enabled to get better and quicker work at lower prices, but will get work done at home which some have heretofore ordered of Grand Rapids parties.

The Council.

The meeting of the village council last Thursday evening was brimful of judicious acts, as the following will show:

The Marshal was instructed to keep the piers and revetments clear of all obstructions.

Charles Swallow was elected trustee to fill vacancy caused by the removal of Charles Ely.

Trustee Newman was requested to ask the resignation of W. S. Johnson as street commissioner.

The Bay Springs Hotel.

Mr. R. E. Wilbor, the new owner of the Tourists' Home, has arrived at Bay Springs and taken possession. Mr. Wilbor is a thorough business man of the right type. He will reopen the hotel in the spring and make every effort to place it on a paying basis.

We understand that the price paid for the whole property, including the 640 acres of land, was only $7000.

This amount lacks $1,000 of paying for the land, clearing and docks.

Mr. Chapman advertises his furniture for sale at a bargain.

The S. H. Davis' Fish Tugs.

The fish tugs Sea Wing and Fisherman laid up Thursday, and Mr. John McKinnon and the two crews left for Detroit that afternoon. The company would have continued their business here later this fall had their men not demanded a raise of from $30 a month and board to $40 and board. The season's catch here has been very satisfactory, however, being in excess of the catch at Alpena, where the company also has two tugs. Mr. McKinnon announces that as soon as navigation opens next spring, operations here will be continued.

The tug Grayling, now fishing near Manistique, will winter here.

Our Summer Visitors.

The season for summer travel having practically ended we give below the complete number of this season's tourists, taken from the hotel registers and statements of boarding house keepers, as compared with the total number last year.

In 1884 during the season, the Fountain City and Bridge Street Houses registered, 3570, the Belvedere and Chicago Club Houses, 1100; 65 cottages and their guests, 990; Newman House, other hotels and boarding houses, 1200. The total being 8,860.

In 1885, the Bridge Street and Fountain City Houses have had 5960; the Belvedere and Chicago Club Houses, 1320; 75 cottages and guests 1200; Newman House, 475; other hotels and boarding houses 940. Giving a total of 9,895 this season as compared with 8,860 last year, being a gain of 1,035.

AT an emancipation celebration in Vicksburg, Miss., a few days ago the colored people resolved to erect a monument to commemorate that event, the cost of it not to exceed $50,000.

CALA E. STONE, the champion amateur bicyclist of the West and the champion 100-mile rider of America, died suddenly at his home in St. Louis the other night, of a congestive chill.

AN amateur physician says that a ten-days' journey on a bicycle will cure neuralgia. The man who could ride ten successive days on a bicycle wouldn't mind such a little thing as neuralgia.

A BALTIMORE negro has, it is said, literally worn two fingers off in many years of shoveling coal. The case is reported by a physician as a curiosity. There is no apparent disease, and no inconvenience.

CAPTAIN ORLANDO B. HALL and wife, of Bridgeport, Conn., celebrated their golden wedding recently by setting off, with a horse and phaeton, to drive over the route they followed on their bridal tour, fifty years ago.

THE monster petition of the Salvation Army regarding the protection of girls, recently presented to the English Parliament, was two miles six hundred yards and one foot long, and bore upward of 353,000 signatures.

IN order to gain a coveted prize a young couple residing near Syracuse, N. Y., were recently married upon the Onondaga Fair grounds, with 30,000 people to witness the ceremony. Nearly every exhibitor upon the ground gave the pair a present.

A CONFIDENT matrimonial agent of Dakota advertises to "accommodate 10,000 girls with husbands in Dakota on ninety days' notice." A great Eastern emigration is desired, especially by Fargo, which has only four unmarried girls in a population of 12,000.

THE importations of live stock from foreign countries to the United States for the seven months ended July 31, 1885, were as follows: Cattle, 14,904; horses, 11,710; sheep, 4,185, against the following for the corresponding period of 1884: Cattle, 25,425; horses, 18,195; sheep, 1,875.

AN exchange says that Alderman Jones, of Denver, arose the other evening in the Council and said: "You are all thieves and blacklegs! You are hypocrites, robbers and traitors! Every one of you ought to be in State Prison for life." And then the virtuous Alderman dodged sixteen inkstands and skipped out for home.

AT Portage, N. Y., the other afternoon Prof. J. E. DeLeon, of Springfield, O., walked across the river on a tight rope stretched three hundred and fifty feet from side to side, at a distance of two hundred feet above the rocky bed, and directly above the falls. The rope is an inch in diameter, much smaller than is generally used in such feats.

MR. FREDERICK BAHR proposes at an early day to test a new flying machine in Washington. The machine is in the shape of a cigar and is furnished with wings. It is fifty feet long by fourteen in diameter, with wings like a bird, a tail and a rudder. It will be inflated with gas. The inventor will be suspended under the center of the machine, which will sail through the air horizontally, the wings being the propelling power.

PARIS appears to be overstocked with American dentists at present. The other day a recently established dentist brought complaint in court against his servant for having left him suddenly without giving notice. The servant justified his conduct by explaining that all the while he was in the doctor's house not a single patient made his appearance, while he was obliged to sit near the window and scream by the hour, to make people believe that teeth were being pulled inside by wholesale. The court acquitted the servant.

EASTERN ROUMELIA, the scene of the new movement on the chess-board of European politics, is a province created by the Congress of Berlin in 1878. It was autonomic until the recent change in Government, though, under the provisions of the treaty, it formed an integral part of the Turkish Empire, and was governed by a Christian appointed by the Porte, subject to the approval of the Powers. The province is bounded on the north by the Balkans, on the east by the Red Sea, on the south by old Roumelia, and on the west by Bulgaria. The area is 13,603 square miles and the population 750,000.

STARVING FISHERMEN.

A Sad Story of Suffering Along the Labrador Coast—The Fisheries Prove a Failure, and the Inhabitants Are Left in a Starving Condition.

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 5.—It has been officially announced here that the Labrador fisheries have proved a failure and that the inhabitants along that inhospitable shore are starving. The news came via St. Johns, N. F., a fishing schooner having put in there bearing for the Government a petition from the inhabitants of Sandwich Bay stating that they were starving and imploring assistance before winter sets in. This, coupled with a description furnished by the Captain and crew of the schooner, was at once forwarded to the Dominion Government here. The account of the Captain shows a terrible condition of affairs. He states that already the cold has set in, snow having fallen on several occasions. Cod and mackerel seem to have completely vanished from the waters. The porgie fish have been so scarce that the oil factories have not been able to obtain sufficient to keep them moving and have consequently closed up for the season, throwing out of employment a large number of persons. These have been living off what they could beg. Articles of food have long since gone to such fabulous prices as to be entirely out of the reach of the poor, the supply of flour being entirely exhausted. Having to subsist on so much salt beef, scurvy has made its appearance, and many have died with it. The sufferings of the women and children are frightful, the little ones dying in the arms of mothers who have no food to give them, and cold and exposure complete the list of woes. The news creates great excitement. The Government has acted with great promptness. A steamer with fuel and provisions on her in large quantities will be ready to sail by Monday. Mgr. Boesse, Apostolic Vicar, accompanied by several Sisters of Charity, will go with the expedition. Several trips will be necessary to meet the demand, as the famine extends along the entire coast. The sisters will take a large assortment of medicines for the sick. Many private citizens are contributing clothing and delicacies.

PRAYERS FOR RELIEF.

Religious Demonstrations in Montreal in Supplication for Deliverance from the Plague—The Epidemic Spreading.

MONTREAL, Can., Oct. 5.—A heavy rain-storm yesterday prevented the out-door procession of the Catholic congregation to invoke the intercession of the Virgin Mary to stay the progress of the epidemic. The procession took place inside the French parish church on Notre Dame street in the afternoon. Fully ten thousand persons were present. Rev. Father Marliceau, assisted by a large number of clergymen, conducted the ceremonies. The statue of the Madonna of Notre Dame de Bon Secours was carried on a dais and down the aisles of the immense edifice. The statue, a very old relic belonging to the Seminary of St. Sulpice, was brought from France early in the eighteenth century, and has been used for one hundred and fifty years in times of special prayer. The procession was preceded by the beadle of the church with several assistants, all in their Swiss uniform. Then followed acolytes, after whom came the clergy bearing the crucifix and swinging a censer. The madonna elevated on a dais followed. As the procession moved through the aisle among the congregation the latter bowed their heads in silent supplication. Returning to the altar, the solemn benediction of the holy sacrament was offered by Rev. Nathan Gandin, assisted by a deacon and sub-deacon. Special prayers were offered for the arrest of the small-pox scourge.

At St. James' Church Father Filiatrault delivered a forcible address. He said that although he had attended hundreds of small-pox patients during the last fourteen years he had never contracted the disease. He believed it was owing to his having been vaccinated. The address made a great impression on the congregation, which is the aristocratic French congregation of the city. Hundreds expressed the intention of getting vaccinated at once.

There were seventy-three new cases of small-pox reported Saturday. The deaths from the epidemic for six days last week in the city and suburbs were 450, and for the last month 950. The disease is still spreading.

ROMANTIC SUICIDE.

Two Lovers Who Could Not Marry Kill Themselves in Central Park—The Question of Life or Death Decided by Ballot.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—Policeman Dougan, of the Central Park force, heard four pistol shots Saturday evening and groans. Hurrying to the spot whence the sounds came, he discovered a man dying and a woman dead. Both were robed in black. On the woman's breast, which she had bared for the bullet, lay a lock of her lover's hair, and upon his a dead leaf and a rose. Each wore on the left hand a black glove, and between them lay a "bull-dog" pistol.

Between was a box full of love-letters, which revealed the fact that the man was George Bassendorf, of 19 Liberty street, Union, N. J., and that the woman's Christian name was Maria. From the letters it appeared that the woman was unhappily married, and that she and Bassendorf were lovers. Seeing no hope of marriage, they had long contemplated suicide. Finally it was decided to settle the matter by lot. They had written on slips "shall we live?" "shall we die?" and with these had balloted. The decision was death, and the two had carried out the decision by shooting themselves. Two bullet holes were found in the breast of each. The bullets lay near them on the ground.

Cattle Dying of Hydrophobia.

BAYARD, Ia., Oct. 5.—Five weeks ago a dog owned by John Secor, living near here, went mad and bit many cattle, hogs and dogs. Since then a number of hogs, a dozen head of cattle and two colts, owned by farmers in the vicinity, have gone mad, and have been killed. No dogs are allowed in the streets of Bayard without a muzzle, and nearly all the farmers have killed their dogs, several having gone mad. It is feared that the trouble is not all ended. No human beings have been bitten.

New Diplomats Chosen.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—The President on Saturday appointed the following: To be Consuls-General of the United States—John Cardwell, of Texas, at Cairo; Owen McGarr, of Colorado, to Ecuador. To be United States Consuls—Henry F. Merritt, of Illinois, at Aix-la-Chappelle; Madison A. Lybrook, of Indiana, at Algiers; Otto E. Reimer, of New York, at Santiago de Cuba; Lewis G. Read of New York, at Barbadoes; George R. Goodwin, of Massachusetts, at Annaberg, Saxony; Thomas R. Jernigan, of North Carolina, at Montevideo. The only desirable missions which remain unfilled are those of Austria, Spain, Persia, Siam, Corea, Columbia and Central America.

Reinstating Old Soldiers.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—A number of discharges were made in the Brooklyn Navy Yard last spring, owing to the smallness of the appropriation available. Among them were seven veterans, who have just been reinstated in their positions in accordance with the tenor of a letter recently written by Secretary Whitney, in which he says: "The fact that a man is an honorably-discharged soldier will not militate against his obtaining employment in any of the establishments under the control of the Navy Department, but, on the contrary, the fact will be (as it has been heretofore) considered by me as a recommendation in favor of the applicant for the employment he seeks."

WRECKED BY THE WIND.

A New Jersey Village Devastated by a Cyclone—Much Property Destroyed, but No Lives Lost—An Instructive Report by a Signal Service Officer Concerning the Nature of Tornadoes.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—The village of Westwood, twenty-two miles from this city, was visited by a genuine cyclone Sunday afternoon. Great damage was done to property, but no lives were lost. Shortly after one o'clock a dark, funnel-shaped cloud rose from behind the hills west of the village, and with only a warning hiss struck the village. The first building struck was De Baun's Park Hotel, and in a twinkling it was in ruins. Mrs. De Baun, wife of the proprietor, was blown from a second-story window and dashed violently to the ground, sustaining severe injuries about the head. At the first appearance of danger men, women and children rushed into the streets frantic with fear, and many persons were lifted off their feet and thrown down or were struck by flying missiles, but no one except Mrs. DeBaun was seriously hurt. The path of the cyclone was about 200 feet wide and almost directly through the center of the village. Within this limit not a building was left uninjured. Five minutes after the storm had passed the sun came out clear and bright. The total loss is estimated at $30,000. The scene after the cyclone had passed beggars description. The streets were strewn with trunks and branches of trees, timbers and broken lumber, and household furniture of every description.

TRACKING THE TORNADOES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—Lieutenant John P. Finley, of the Signal Service, who has made the subject of tornadoes a special study for about eight years, is certain trustworthy warnings may soon be sent out to inhabitants of localities which may be threatened with disastrous visitations. The result of his studies may be summarized as follows:

"These storms have distinctly marked characteristics, and are by no means to be confounded with hurricanes, 'blizzards,' cyclones or northwesters. Their tracks are never more than a few hundred yards wide, and their forces are generally exhausted by the time they have traveled forty or fifty miles, though in this latter respect they are quite variable, some having been traced by their lines of devastation more than one hundred and eighty miles. Their rotary motion, which is greatest toward the center, sometimes reaches the enormous rate of two thousand miles an hour, while west to northwest, ordinarily does not exceed forty or fifty miles. They are usually accompanied by electrical disturbances, and are believed to be inhibitored by electrical conditions, though violent thunder-storms sometimes follow them a few miles away. There is a distinct and curious relationship between the tornado and the general storm center which is always apparent in their uniform relative positions, the tornado always occurring south-eastwardly from the center of low barometric pressure, and at a distance of from one to six hundred miles.

The shape of the general storm center, the direction in which its longest diameter lies, and the appearance of the upper and lower clouds, enter, as minor elements, into the problem out of which the weather experts hope to work a complete system of tornado warnings. The visits of the tornado are commonly between the hours of two and six o'clock in the afternoon. Its home is an area which includes the whole of Iowa, all of Missouri except the southeastern corner, the northwestern corner of Arkansas, the north-eastern part of the Indian Territory, Eastern Kansas, Eastern Nebraska, Southern Minnesota, Southern Wisconsin and Western Illinois. Here its season extends from April to August, inclusive. It is a frequent visitor to two or three other regions. One is a strip along the gulf and South Atlantic, which takes in the central portions of Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina, with tornado in Mississippi and North Carolina, over which its devastations are confined to the months of January, February and March. Another includes a portion of southern and central Ohio, a large part of Pennsylvania, a small area in Maryland, a strip across New York, and a corner each of Massachusetts and Connecticut, where it is in season only during the months of August and September."

Lieutenant Finley says that nothing raised by the hand of man above the surface of the earth can withstand the shock of the tornado. He advises people in tornado regions to seek their dugouts upon the appearance of the portentous signs of disaster, and there await the passage of the storm. For their property he advises insurance, so that the losses of the individual may be shared by his more fortunate neighbors. The insurance companies which last year "wrote" $40,000,000 in tornado policies are eagerly awaiting the completion of a map now in process of making which will, it is expected, greatly narrow the so-called tornado regions, and perhaps show that large portions of them have never experienced a destructive storm. Upon this map Lieutenant Finley proposes to show from the complete record of several years, and data as far as obtainable for many previous years, the average number of tornadoes for each locality per annum.

A FATAL CRASH.

A Circus Train Breaks In Two, and One Part Crashes Into the Other, Burying a Hundred Men in the Debris—Five Men Killed and Many Injured.

FERGUS FALLS, Minn., Oct. 5.—The two sections of a train conveying John Robinson's circus from Wahpeton, D. T., for this place over the Fergus Falls branch of the Northern Pacific, collided seven miles west of here yesterday morning, wrecking several cars, killing five persons and hurting many others. The accident happened near a small place called French. The train was going up a steep grade when the head or baggage section broke in two. Ten or twelve cars went flying back at a terrific rate. On the rear of the train were three sleeping-cars occupied by over two hundred workmen, all of whom were sound asleep and not aware of impending danger. The cars which had broken loose increased their speed as they approached the second or cage section, and probably had run a mile before they struck it. The engineer of the rear section saw the cars approaching, but only had time to stop his train before the crash came. The brakemen on the loose cars tried to put on the brakes, but they had difficulty in running from car to car on account of the wagons which impeded their progress. The three sleepers were thrown from the track and smashed into pieces. More than one hundred men were buried in the debris. The people in the rear section at once began the work of removing the men, five of whom were found to be dead and many others wounded and bleeding. One man was taken unhurt from under two corpses.

—The salaries of the British Cabinet are: Secretary Foreign Affairs and Lord of the Treasury, $50,000; Chancellor of the Exchequer, $25,000; Lord High Chancellor, $50,000; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, $100,000; Lord President of Privy Council, $20,000; Secretary for Colonies, $25,000; Home Secretary, $25,000; Secretary of War, $25,000; Secretary of India, $25,000; First Lord of the Admiralty, $22,500; Lord Chancellor of Ireland, $30,000; President Board of Trade, $10,000.

—"You can't add different things together," said a school-teacher. "If you add a sheep and a cow together it does not make two sheep or two cows." A little boy, the son of a milkman, held up his hand and said: "That may do with sheep and cows, but if you add a quart of water to a quart of milk it makes two quarts of milk. I've seen it tried."—Philadelphia North American.

—Philadelphia boasts of five great pie factories, besides innumerable smaller ones, and from these are turned out 20,000 pies daily. The cost of material required for the making of these amounts to be about $800 for flour, $90 for shortening, $200 for fruit, and $275 for sugar, to say nothing of eggs and flavoring materials.

HEAVY FAILURE.

Heath & Co., Prominent Wall Street Brokers, Assign, with Estimated Liabilities of $1,800,000—The Crash Brought about by the Failure of Henry A. Smith, a Noted Speculator Whose Liabilities Are about $3,000,000.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—It was announced on the Stock Exchange shortly before noon yesterday that William Heath & Co. were short over 100,000 shares of stock and unable to meet their obligations. Rumor current the previous evening had prepared the Exchange for the announcement, and the shock was not as great as it otherwise would have been. The decline in prices up to one p. m. was less than one per cent. Later the firm made an assignment, without preferences, to A. R. McConless, manager of their office.

The failure of Heath & Co. was due largely to the failure of Henry M. Smith, a bear operator for several years, to meet his obligations. Mr. Smith followed the example of Heath & Co. and assigned to Mr. Cuming, of the law firm of Vanderpoel, Green & Cuming. Mr. Smith has been a member of the Stock Exchange since 1877. It is stated that Smith is also responsible for the failure of Soutter & Co., having owed them about $250,000. It is the opinion of a number of people on the street that Smith's failure was brought about by Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, who advanced the market in order to break Smith, as punishment for Smith's betrayal of William K. Vanderbilt when they were operating together. It is estimated that Heath was short from 90,000 to 100,000 shares of stock for Smith's account.

Giovanni P. Morosini obtained an attachment against the property of Heath & Co., alleging that the defendants had hypothecated stocks worth $215,000 and misappropriated $265,000 in cash with intent to defraud him. The principal creditors of Heath & Co., besides Mr. Morosini, are these: Jay Gould, $250,000; James T. Low, formerly of the dry goods firm of Low, Harriman & Co., and father of the present head of the firm, about $400,000; Addison Cammack, $60,000; William L. Scott, of Erie, Pa., $20,000; Soutter & Co., who failed Tuesday, $250,000. The liabilities of Heath & Co. can not fall short of $1,800,000, and may exceed that sum. The assets, except the claim against Henry N. Smith, are unknown. This claim amounts, it is said, to about $1,200,000.

THE NATION'S FINANCES.

Condition of the Country's Treasury as Shown by the Statement for the First Quarter of the Fiscal Year.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—The first quarter of the fiscal year and the first half year of the new Administration has just closed. The customs show a falling off of $2,500,000, and the internal revenue is hardly changed as compared with last year. The ordinary expenditures are reduced $7,000,000 in the three months. Pensions show an increase of more than two million dollars, and the interest shows a very slight reduction.

The stock of silver dollars owned by the Government was a little over $48,000,000 on the last day of March. It was almost $68,000,000 on the last day of June, and on the last day of September it was $75,743,127. The outstanding silver certificates have diminished $19,000,000 in six months, while the number of silver dollars in the Treasury has increased $9,000,000, and the silver owned by the Government has increased nearly $28,000,000.

The Treasurer's balance, or so-called surplus, in the Treasury, according to the form of statement introduced by Treasurer Jordan, was $22,250,025 on the last day of March. On the last day of September it had increased more than $41,000,000, and amounted to $63,903,100. By the form of statement used until Mr. Jordan became Treasurer, the surplus in the Treasury on September 30, was $188,441,852. In spite of this large increase of surplus there has been no bond call by this Administration, and none has been made since September, 1884.

In the last six months the public debt, minus cash in the Treasury, has been reduced $11,555,580. The reduction, however, has been effected by increasing the cash instead of reducing the debt. The interest-bearing debt, including accrued interest and interest due and unpaid, has actually increased in the last six months $261,636.

BLOWN SKYWARD.

Two Persons Killed, Five Fatally Scalded and Ten Others Very Badly Injured by a Boiler Explosion in a Pittsburgh Iron Mill.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 3.—Shortly after three o'clock yesterday morning a battery of boilers at the Solar Iron Works, of Clarke & Co., on Thirty-sixth street, exploded with disastrous effect. The night turn had just been relieved by the day force, when a loud explosion startled the workmen, and that portion of the works in the vicinity of the boilers was filled with a cloud of death-dealing steam. Through the dense mist came shrieks and groans, which notified the employes beyond harm's reach that a frightful calamity had overtaken a portion of their fellow-workmen. As soon as the steam settled down a rush was made for the spot where the explosion occurred, when it was ascertained that the mud-drum of the boilers had exploded, and the escaping steam had scalded seventeen men. Closer investigation showed that of this number, fourteen were badly burned and three fatally scalded. Nine of the injured are boys. The large number of boys hurt is accounted for by the fact that they were employed to handle the hoop iron, which was rolled on the mill nearest the boilers. Those most seriously injured were taken to the West Pennsylvania Hospital, while the others were taken to their homes.

Engineer Powers says that the Hartford Insurance Company inspectors pronounced the boilers and mud-drums safe only two months ago. Investigation shows that the coating of the mud-drums was nearly eaten through, which accounts for the tragedy. Fragments of the shattered drum, not more than a thirty-second part of an inch in thickness, were found scattered about through the wreckage. Five more of the victims are pronounced fatally injured by the attending physicians, and their deaths are momentarily expected. Their names are Charles Heywood, Joseph Getze, Patrick Henderson, Thomas Stein and William Daniels.

A Successful Venture.

MONTREAL, Can., Oct. 2.—As an outcome of the "slumming crusade" of the aristocracy in London, a committee was named for the purpose of assisting members of the lowest classes of the metropolis to emigrate to Canada. In addition to this, fifty families were given £100 each by Lady Burdette Coutts for the same purpose. From a report made by Rev. Mr. Keloe, who has just returned from visiting them in Manitoba, the venture has been highly successful. The emigrants are all doing well, paying the interest on the money advanced to them. They are perfectly satisfied with their lot. Mr. Keloe returns to England for the purpose of sending over some more from the slums of London.

A Daring Boy Robs a Texas Mail Coach.

DALLAS, Tex., Oct. 3.—When the San Angelo and Abilene stage was sixteen miles east of Runnels a smooth-faced boy of eighteen, riding a gray horse, met and passed it. On his shoulder was a Winchester rifle, and a revolver was strapped to his side. As the stage passed him he ordered the driver to stop. An exciting race of half a mile ensued, when the robber overtook the stage and demanded the mail-sacks. They were delivered to him and he leisurely appropriated the part of the mail he wanted. At this moment a stage came up from the opposite direction, containing seven male passengers. They prepared to attack the robber, but he rode off, leaving the mail-bags on the prairie. Officers are in pursuit.

LOGAN'S TRIBUTE.

The Greatness and Virtue of General Grant Reviewed in Fitting Terms—Reminiscences of the Fort Donelson, Vicksburg, Chattanooga and Other Campaigns.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—General John A. Logan, speaker at the celebration of the services in memory of General Grant, held under the auspices of the Washington Commandery of the Grand Army of the Republic, delivered a ringing oration which was enthusiastically applauded by the veterans.

SUBSTANCE OF THE ORATION.

The address embodied a recital, from the stand-point of a personal observer, of the military history of General Grant. He began with his own first meeting with Grant at Springfield, Ill., where the latter was assisting the Governor of his State to organize the volunteers under the first call of President Lincoln, touched briefly and with little elaboration or comment upon the steps in the upward progress of the subject of his eulogy, the battles fought and won, and the campaigns planned and carried out. He alluded to the jealousy and littleness of General Halleck when Grant's superior in rank placed him almost a prisoner at Fort Henry, to Halleck's dilatory movements against Corinth, to his disregard of advice and of information that the enemy were escaping, and to the fruitless outcome of the campaign, the effect of which, however, was to restore Grant to the command of his old army of the Tennessee. He described the failures of Grant's first movements against Vicksburg, threatening a loss of confidence on the part of the people and resulting in clamors for his removal. The President's confidence he said, was, however, unshaken, and he determined to trust Grant a little longer.

Grant's next plan, the speaker said, was recognized by the military authorities of the country as wholly unmilitary and dangerous. They believed that it was military suicide, and against all science of war. It was a movement, however, full of audacity, and in its results showed the genius of the man who planned it. This was the campaign which resulted in the fall of Vicksburg. Halleck had directed Grant to leave Vicksburg, and move down to Port Hudson and assist Banks—Banks, being Grant's superior, would thus have been in command of the combined forces. Halleck suggested that after Port Hudson should fall, Vicksburg should be assailed. Halleck's letter came too late. Five battles had been fought. Grant was already moving on Vicksburg. Pemberton was driven within the walls, and locked up, with only sixty days' rations.

On the 4th of July, 1863, the long and bloody siege came to its termination, and Grant at the head of his victorious army entered the city, and placed the old flag upon the court-house. It was the largest capture of men and munitions of war ever made in any modern war up to that time. In the campaign the enemy's killed, wounded and captured numbered more than Grant's entire effective force. Port Hudson was at once surrendered, and the backbone of the rebellion was broken.

The orator touched upon the withdrawal of Rosecrans within the lines of Chattanooga, where he was cooped up, with Bragg in possession of his communication. Rosecrans was he said, completely enervated, and apparently in a position where he must sooner or later surrender for want of supplies. Grant was ordered by the President to take command of that department, and his first act was to assign Thomas to the command in place of Rosecrans. Chattanooga was subsequently relieved by Grant, and the battles and victories of Lookout Mountain and Mission Ridge followed. Having defeated Bragg and driven him from his stronghold, Grant now commenced maturing plans for the great final campaigns. His idea was to move from Chattanooga to Atlanta and thence to Mobile, unless something should interpose in the meantime to force him in the direction of Savannah from Atlanta. In a letter written that winter Grant said sharp fighting would occur in the spring, and if the Union forces were successful the war would be ended in a year.

Grant was now made Lieutenant-General, and placed in command of the armies of the Republic. But one person, George Washington, had ever held the position before. (Winfield Scott merely had the brevet.) On the third day of March, 1864, he was ordered to Washington. His intention at that time was to return from Washington and lead the armies of Sherman, Thompson and Schofield to Atlanta. Unforeseen events, however, changed his intention, and forced him to the East, but his campaign was carried out almost to the letter by others. Having assumed supreme command on the 17th of March, he at once proceeded to establish his headquarters in the field at Culpepper, Va. Heretofore the campaigns of the different armies had been conducted without any reference to each other. Grant purposed now that all his campaigns should proceed with one [illegible] end in view. He would combine all his available Western forces under Sherman, and those of the East under Meade, and move the two great armies toward a common center. Sherman was to move against Johnston, and hammer and pound and follow him until he was destroyed, captured or driven back to Richmond, when both rebel armies were to be crushed between the two great armies of the Republic. Meade was to advance upon Lee and strike him wherever he could be found. The plan was carried out successfully, and during its progress the victories were achieved which saved the Republic.

The speaker described briefly but in glowing terms the events of Grant's civil career and the honors showered upon him by our people at home and by men and nations abroad. "From Belmont to the siege of Vicksburg," said General Logan in his summing up, "I was near him in nearly all his marches, campaigns and battles, being permitted by him to take possession of Vicksburg with my command on account of its having approached nearer the enemy than any other. During my term as commander of that city I was with him almost every day, and from the time when at the head of that glorious old army of the Tennessee, of which he was the first commander and I its last, I marched by his reviewing stand at the National capital, and down to the last painful days of his memorable life I was with him very often. During all this while I was a close observer of him. Grant was usually known and recognized as a quiet and silent man, but when engaged in conversation on any subject in which he felt an interest there were few who excelled him as a conversationalist. He wrote tersely and well, and at times most eloquently. The Nation was at different times thrilled by his terse epigrammatic sentences. When he wrote to Buckner, the commander at Fort Donelson: 'No terms other than an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works,' his words burned with the glow of patriotic fire in the heart of every loyal freeman. When he had fought the battle of the Wilderness and wrote to the President: 'I propose to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer,' he infused into the people and his troops a part of his own tenacity and faith in final success.

In his short speech to the committee who waited upon him, informing him of his nomination, first made by the Republicans as their candidate for Chief Magistrate, he used the memorable words in his conclusion: 'Let us have peace.' These words fell upon the people with an electrical effect. His coolness, his perception, his aptness in using the right word in the right place, and doing the right thing at the right time, were at the bottom of his success as a civil Magistrate, just as his great faculty of doing the right thing at the right time and place, and sometimes in the most unexpected manner, was at the bottom of his military success. The speaker described the subject of his eulogies as a man of great strength of intellect, remarkable common sense, coolness, self-possession and tenacity; a true friend to those worthy of his friendship, and the kindest and best of husbands and fathers.

It had been said that he was not a strategist, to the speaker's belief he was without a rival either as a strategist or commander. He was greater as a military commander than Washington, Napoleon, Wellington, Marlborough, the Prince of Orange, Frederick, Charlemagne, Hannibal or Scipio Africanus, and in the speaker's belief coming centuries would give him a rank equal if not superior to that of Julius Cæsar, and when the mists thrown around his civil Administration by partisan enemies should be dispelled it would equal in glory any Administration of the past. Duty was with him a living principle. Nothing could swerve him from a course he believed to be right. He was conscientious, just, truthful, courageous and magnanimous. He stood by his friends and forgave his enemies. He fought not for glory, but to save his country.

When criticised and censured, when the clouds of calumny hung about him, he stood with folded arms among the thunders, witnessing the wrath of his enemies, but he spoke not in his own defense. Time finally dispelled the clouds and let in the sunshine of honest judgment. Then his heart was found as clear as the dewdrop which hangs upon the lips of the velvet rose. He believed in the justice of God, and that sooner or later He would by some means guide him as commander of our armies to the line where justice would take the place of wrong and 'man's inhumanity to man' be rebuked. 'But,' continued the speaker, 'his race has been run. The great and good man went up on the mountains to die. The attention of the whole civilized world was directed to that spot. His glory was that not of his country alone, but of the civilized races of man. When the news of his death went [trembling] over the wires to the uttermost parts of earth, the people of every nation and tongue stood with bowed heads. Grant had in his life ascended to the topmost heights of mortal fame. The greatest renown was his. The glory of man's greatest achievements stone round and about him. God called him, and he stepped from his high pedestal on this earth into the presence of the great white throne, where he was crowned with immortal glory that shineth on forever."

A GIRL'S RETROSPECT.

The summer is over. The season
Was cool at the seaside, you know;
This weather perhaps was the reason
That none of us captured a beau.

For the men found it cool in the city,
And the brokers were blue, it was thought,
So we lost every chance (what a pity!),
And no dashing fellow was caught.

So Maud and Madola and Lillie,
Violet, Natelssa and I,
Were left in the chase (am I silly?)
To wait till next year—and to sigh.

For nothing is done in the winter
In town, with gay talk and fine clothes;
No beau says: "My dear Araminta,"
And none is betrayed to propose.

But when you walk out by the water,
And moonlight falls soft on the shore,
The primmest mamma's plainest daughter
Some masculine heart will adore.

I hope if we go there next season,
We girls, by half dozens and twelves,
Will not again need, in all reason,
To just simply waltz with ourselves.

Of girls who were blushing and twenty,
With some who were near twenty-five,
There always were more than a plenty,
And yet not a man would arrive.

How wearily all the long summer
We wandered by sea-shore and tide,
And found no available comer—
A bridegroom, perhaps, with his bride!

We would stroll to the depot and steamer
To see what was rarer than pearls,
Each one a deliberate schemer,
And lo, a new bevy of girls!

The coats and the hats were all wanting,
No garment of men was seen,
And some gray headed old maids were taunting
Us of—[illegible] (I thought it was mean).

Another such year would be awful,
For what are fine feathers and clothes,
If fate is to make it unlawful
For girls to be brushed with beaux?

The summer has vanished and faded;
The forests are withered and sere,
No lover our hearts has invaded—
'Tis horrid to wait a whole year!

AT WHAT A COST!

The Message From the Grave of Her Unloved Husband.

It was late at night. The fire had gradually settled down until it became a steady glowing mass of red, giving plenty of heat but little flame. The shaded lamp from the edge of the table threw a circle of light, widening until it reached the floor, where it lay, a luminous disc, and left all outside in somber gloom. The room was evidently a library, as tall cases of books loomed from each wall, and the massive table in the center was strewn with pamphlets and writing materials. On a low chair, near the fire, partly in light and partly in darkness, sat a woman. She might be about forty-five years of age, and was still beautiful. Her hands, with fingers interlaced, rested upon her lap, and her head leant wearily against the side of the mantelpiece. Her attitude, even without the traces of recent tears upon her face, betokened extreme grief.

Well indeed might she grieve, for in the room above her lay a dead man—her husband. She had bade her household leave her and retire to rest, and hour after hour sounded as she sat by the fire and mourned in solitude.

True, the man who had died that day had not been her first love—not the one she had once hoped was destined to link his lot with hers. She had married him for esteem, friendship, respect and many other admirable reasons; but her heart was with one who had died many years ago. Yet they had been man and wife for twenty years, and his unwavering love, his kindness, the homage he had ever paid her, had earned, as with a quorum they ever must, their reward; and as with sorrowful eyes she gazed into the fire, and lived again those twenty placid years, she felt that Death had that day created a void in her life which would never again be filled.

And yet the dead man had not been the most cheerful companion to a woman in the prime of health and beauty. He was ever sad, at times gloomy; but no harsh words to her had ever crossed his lips, even in his most dreary moods. He had lived a fair and noble life, doing, in a quiet, secret way, much good in the place where his life was spent; good, the extent of which she, perhaps, only knew. And as she thought of these things, and of the poor white face upstairs, another flood of tears came to her relief. She would see it once more to-night; and by the side of that motionless form kneel down and say, "If I have not loved you as your heart wished, I have done all that I could; all that I promised." With this intention she rose from her seat, and, rising, an object on the mantelpiece attracted her attention. It was a small key; and that morning, even as he died, her husband, with feeble fingers, had placed it in her hand, whispering, with a yearning look on his wan face: 'Read and forgive.'"

In the agitation of that terrible hour, she had taken little notice of those mysterious words—the last, indeed, he spoke—but now she remembered them, and felt there was something he wished her to know.

The key, she was aware, gave access to a secretaire in which her husband kept his private papers. She raised the shade from the lamp, and its light, hitherto concentrated, spread over and illuminated the room, in one corner of which stood a black walnut bureau with antique brass handles. She opened it, and after a few moments' search found what she knew intuitively was the document designed for her perusal. It was a bulky package, sealed and addressed—"For my wife. Private."

Wondering, even in her grief, what its contents could possibly be, and why the instructions to read it were coupled with that piteous appeal for forgiveness, she returned to her former seat, and after adjusting the light broke open the seals and commenced the perusal of the manuscript. Womanlike, she turned over several pages rapidly as if to catch some idea of the general tenor of the revelation, and as on the cursory glance she took she saw one name, a well-known name, written frequently, a feeling of fear thrilled her, and with a low cry of pain and horror she set her lips firmly, and with eager eyes devoured the closely-written lines. The message from the man who lay dead ran thus:

"My Wife—When you read this I shall be dead, and you will, I have little doubt, be still in the prime of womanhood. Whether the love I have ever borne you; whether the remembrance of those years spent, at least happily, under this roof together, will enable you, after reading this, to think of me without cursing my name, I know not. Yet, I dare not die and make no sign. I dare not let the grave cover the secret which is fretting my life out—which has twined for years around my heart like a snake, and which will at last stop its beating—a secret that even you in your wildest dreams never suspected.

"As you read these pages you will weep; but not for me. You will call for one who can never return, but the name you utter will not be mine. Widowed, though you be, it is not your husband you will mourn. Yet when this is written my mind will be more at ease, although I know the confession, which may lighten my remorse a little lays a heavy burden on you. At least, forgive me this.

"How shall I begin? As I sit here to-night, a prematurely aged man, I look back through the long years—so long, so weary to me—and see myself in the same room, a young man of twenty-five, with all that could make life pleasant at my command. Riches and friends—youth and health and, as I fondly hoped at that time, love that, sooner or later, would be mine. Here I sat, I remember, one winter's evening, with my favorite companions even then—my books. Was I reading, or was I dreaming of what might be? I know not.

"My servant entered and handed me a card—'Mr. Gerald Gordon.' I shall feel, even in my grave, your heart throb as you read that name. Gerald Gordon had been one of my earliest and dearest friends; and, if lost sight of for some years, never forgotten. I was delighted to find him under my roof and hastened to greet him. He had prospered in the world, both having made and inherited money, and had recently returned to England, after some years' profitable work abroad. Affairs had called him to my neighborhood, and upon his return journey he had come a little out of his way to pay me a visit for the sake of old times.

"We were unfeignedly glad to meet, and, as our hands clasped, many recollections of happy, boyish days rose between us, and the pressing invitation I gave him to stay some time with me was accepted as freely and heartily as it was given.

"For you, Gertrude, least of all, need I paint his portrait; but well I remember, as he sat with me that night, looking at his handsome face, with those straight, clear-cut features, bronzed by the southern sun; his crisp, brown hair and stalwart, manly frame, and thinking one of the greatest gifts, after all, was personal appearance.

"Our conversation after so long a separation naturally consisted of questions and answers of a personal nature, and I soon asked him:

"'Have you met your fate yet, Gerald?'

"'Been in love, I suppose you mean?' he replied, laughing. 'Well, you see, I have just come from parts where a fellow must make love, or pretend to, to get along at all; but I can not plead guilty to any grand passion, as yet.'

"'But how about you?' he continued. 'Have any bright, rustic eyes come between you and your books?'

"Fool that I was not to open my heart to him then and there! Not to tell him, I thought of one woman only! Yet I was shy and proud. I could not say that my love was viewed favorably. A withered flower, given half in jest—to you remember it? A little preference, it might be, over my rivals, and that bestowed for the sake of friendship, not love—this was all I had to show in return for the love I had given and which I knew must ever give through life. So I laughed as he questioned me and answered as in jest:

"'I am heartwhole as you, Gerald, and certainly invulnerable against the attacks of rustic maidens hereabouts.'

"'I hoped and expected to be introduced to your future wife in the person of the only daughter of some neighboring squire, and would have done you a good turn by sounding your praises while I admired his fat oxen.'

"'Well, I will present you to all the eligible daughters hereabout, and you can praise their papas' oxen on your own account.'

"'Thank you—although, seriously, I am tired of living alone, and want a wife and a home; so I am quite ready to meet my fate when and wherever she appears.'

"I do not hesitate, my wife, to record these trivial words, for I know they will seem to you as sweet echoes of a long-stilled voice.

"Gordon and I sat talking nearly all that night, and parted at last, happy to find the other's friendship the same as of old.

"The next day, with little regret, I tossed my books aside, and did all in my power to make my guest's visit a pleasant one to him. We shot, drove and rode together, and the short and wintry days seemed even shorter with my light-hearted friend at my side. I took him to visit all my friends, save one; I need scarcely say the reason for that omission. Too well I knew that, had I been a girl, Gerald Gordon was the man who might have won my heart had he chosen. Too well I knew that, in the eyes of love enhanced, they did not imagine your charms, and that his interest at least, could scarcely fail to be roused. So I dreaded to bring about a meeting between him and you. It came at last. I would have shunned that gathering could I have found a decent pretext, but the whole countryside was bidden to the ball, and my absence from it would have been remarked. Besides, Gerald would have gone, anyway. He was very merry as we drove over, at the expense of the imaginary persons we should meet; but I said nothing. The moment we entered the room I saw his eyes fall upon you. I saw his look of surprise, of admiration, as he comprehended your regal beauty at one glance, and before the evening was over I felt that what I dreaded was afoot, and that my friend would probably be my rival. If his attentions to you that evening were no more than man might properly pay to the most attractive woman in the assemblage, they were sufficient to make me fear the worst. Even as I write this I can see his tall figure bending over you, and hear him whispering words, which, spoken with the easy, self-confident manners of a man of the world, I know, intuitively, must have been sweet to any young girl's ears.

"At last, that night, gay and enjoyable to all save me, ended. You had departed, and after that it needed little persuasion on my part to draw Gerald from the scene. We started on our drive home, with the stars shining pure and clear through the frosty skies. I was sullen and unhappy; my companion brimful of curiosity to learn all I could tell him concerning his late partner.

"'Is Miss Howard a friend of yours?' was his first question.

"'I have known her for some years. Do you admire her? Although I need scarcely ask,' I added, bitterly.

"'Admire her! I should think so. I have seen some of the most beautiful women in the world, but never one I admired more. She was not very well dressed, of course, but that is only a milliner's business.'

"So he talked on and on as we drove that six miles of road, and my heart sank within me, and I cursed the friendship which had led him to visit me and induced me to press him to prolong his stay. He spoke of nothing but you—ringing your praises in various keys, until I relapsed into a sort of moody silence, or only answered his eulogistic remarks by monosyllables. Probably he noticed my changed manner, as on reaching home he said:

"'You are awfully tired, I can see, Philip; so I will be merciful to-night and not keep you up for another cigar. Good night.'

"Whether he kept me up or not, it mattered nothing. Weary as I truly was, there was little sleep for me that night.

"When we met the next morning, it was the same again; your image was clearly before his eyes. Although he spoke jestingly of the havoc you had wrought, I knew that more than jest lay under that laughing exterior; that the impression you had made was no transient one. I tried to hide my feeling, and to answer his playful remarks in the like vein, but my efforts were of little use. I felt that his keen eye detected something amiss with me. He looked inquisitive, but said nothing for awhile. After breakfast, as we were discussing our plans for the day, he asked:

"'Would it not be politeness to ride over and inquire how Miss Howard is after last night's dissipation?'

"I started, and answered: 'If you wish it particularly we will do so,' and, as I forced the words, my voice sounded strange, and I felt that the color had left my cheek.

"The manner of my assent must, I suppose, have strengthened any suspicion he already felt as to the true state of the case with me, for he crossed the room, placed his hands on my shoulders, and with his bright, searching eyes, looked into mine.

"'Tell me truly, Philip—truly, mind—is there anything like love between you two?'

"Even then I might have told him, but I was too proud to say I loved without love in return. Too proud to throw myself on his mercy, as it seemed to me such a confession must; so I met his eyes without quailing, and answered firmly:

"'There is no love between us.'

"'But you do love her?' persisted Gerald.

"'I admire her for her great beauty; that is all.'

"And even as I told the lie, I saw that he believed what he wished to believe, and I knew that my fate was sealed.

"'Then let us go,' he said, quietly, as he moved his hands from my shoulders.

"We rode over to your house; we saw you, and my jealous eye detected a faint blush and look of pleasure on your face as you greeted us—a blush and a look such as my coming alone had never yet called forth.

"Gertrude, it is for you, not for me, to picture the events of the next few days. Sick at heart, I pleaded indisposition and returned to my books; sacrificing politeness, I left Gordon free to follow his own devices. Well did I know whither his steps turned every day, and clearly could I read in the brightened expression of his ever bright face how well the suit he was urging prospered. So much so, that it was with a feeling of dull despair, not surprise, I listened the night when he told me you had consented to be his wife. Lover-like he sat, hour after hour, dilating upon the perfections of the prize he had won, and reveling in his visions of future happiness. And I, who loved you as I believe no other man ever yet loved woman, suffered torture on the rack of his raptures. I had to listen to your praises from the lips of the one whom I had now almost brought myself to believe had robbed me of all I longed for in the world. And there was to be no delay—no respite for me. He was wealthy, so what was there to wait for? Within three months' time you were to be married.

"'How I bless the day I came to see you, old fellow!' he cried once, in the effusion of his joy. 'Now you shall complete your kindness by letting me stay with you until the happy time. Of course I must go away a bit to see about a house and that sort of thing, but I mean to be here as much as I can.'

"If I had followed true impulse as I spoke, I should have cursed him and bade him begone, but I was forced to restrain myself and tell him how welcome he was to make my house his home as long as it pleased him. Yet I felt I dare not stay myself to witness his happiness. That night, as I lay in bed, casting about for an excuse plausible enough to enable me to leave my guest alone for the next month or two, I knew that in the depth of my heart I hated Gerald Gordon—I hated him as the one who had stolen my life's hope from me—I hated him for his animal spirits, his good looks, his power of pleasing and winning the affection of man, woman or child, so different from me—I even hated him because I knew you would be happy with him, for he had all the qualities to make a home happy—I hated him as Cain hated Abel, and for the same reason; had not his offering been accepted and mine rejected? And several days passed by: each day the tortures I endured seemed greater; each day my hatred grew more intense. In a feverish sort of way I forced myself to laugh and jest, and Gordon, with a lover's selfishness, never noticed how unnatural my manner was, or guessed how, by this time, I detested the sound of his voice, the clear ring of his laugh, or even his very presence.

"'One thing pleases me more than I can say,' he placidly remarked one evening. 'It is that what I once believed to be a fact was only a creation of my own brain. I was afraid I might be the rival of my old friend; but Gertrude herself assures me the only feeling that ever existed between you two was one of pure friendship. So I am happier, knowing you will dance at my wedding with a light heart.'

"Dance at his wedding! I would rather dance on my mother's grave!

"Gertrude, my wife, there is one day in every year which is solemn and sad to both of us. A day when the choicest flowers are laid on a tomb, now growing gray with time. A day, many hours of which you spend alone, holding a lock of hair, and gazing on a miniature. And yet, if the love you bore another man is strong in your heart, upon that day you have ever seemed to draw closer to me than at other times. As your eyes, sad with unforgotten sorrow, meet mine, you think: 'Our grief is from the same source—mine for love and his for friendship.' And with one memory between us, I know for the moment your heart grows nearer to mine, and I realize what life might have been could your love have crowned it. Read now the truth and hate me.

"That day was the first for a long time I had spent alone with Gerald Gordon. You were away on a visit to some friends at a distance. The weather was fine, though wintry, and as I felt I could not endure the long hours indoors in the society of the man I hated, I suggested taking our guns and walking down to the coast in the hope of shooting some ducks. Gordon leapt at the idea. 'I shall be glad to do a bit of hard walking,' he said; 'for three weeks I have only been love-making, and that isn't much exercise. I fancy my muscles must be growing soft from want of using.'

"As he spoke he held out an arm like a bar of iron for me to feel.

"An hour's walk brought us to the coast; you know it well. For the distance of, perhaps, two miles runs a turf-covered, a most perpendicular cliff; then it shelves away gradually, and one can easily get down to the water's edge. Here was our destination. We intended to walk along the edge of the sea, shooting anything worth powder and shot.

"The tide, when high, lashes the foot of the coast cliffs; when low, it leaves a strip of sand uncovered. The rock of which the cliff is composed, is of crumbling, unstable chalk, and has the habit of getting hollowed out under the surface, leaving green cushions, firm enough in appearance, but apt to break away as the unwary foot presses them. A dangerous cliff it is, from the edge of which one shrinks instinctively.

"We walked briskly along the green sward; I was some paces in front of Gordon, not being much in the humor to listen to his inevitable rhapsodies on the one theme. As he followed, I could hear him singing a love song. It was Mexican, I believe, and picked up somewhere on his travels. Though the language was strange to me, the words sounded soft and musical, and the repetition of the passionate refrain almost maddened me, so well do I know to whom it was directed. Suddenly the melody of the song changed to a sharp cry of despair—a cry that went through me like a knife—and I turned hastily round, the rent at the edge of the treacherous green sward told the tale even before I heard the horrible, hopeless, dull thud on the sand below.

"Believe me, when I say, at that moment all thought of hate and envy left me. Horror stricken, I threw myself at full length upon the grass and crept to the edge of the cliff. The cliff at this point overhung even more than usual, and it was with a feeling of hope I saw that Gordon had fallen clear of the rock and lay upon the sand. He was lying almost in a heap, and must have sustained fearful injuries; but dead he was not, for I saw him, after making a few piteous struggles, succeed in turning his face toward me.

"'Gerald,' I cried, 'are you much hurt? For God's sake try and answer me.'

"A faint voice—the ghost of his usual voice—replied: 'I have broken one arm and, I think, my thigh. Can you come down to me?'

"'I can not,' I said, 'without going along the coast for a mile or more. I am going now to get ropes and help. Try and bear up till I return.'

"And then, leaving my gun to mark the spot where he fell, I turned and, swiftly as I could, commenced running across country. I knew the path well. The nearest house was at least two miles away, so the poor fellow must lie in agony for some time before I could bring him the indispensable aid. With the remembrance of that helpless form lying on the sand before me, my thoughts were only how to rescue him with as little loss of time as possible, and for the first five minutes I ran at the top of my speed. Sheer exhaustion then compelled me to pause and draw breath, and as I moderated my pace the awful thought for the first time came to me. The tide! the tide! I remembered it was rising—that it was about three-quarters flood—that Gordon was lying very near to the edge of the water, and I knew it I could not bear him aid before the sea covered that narrow strip of sand he was a dead man. And then the temptation began. Let no man say there is no devil, for I tell you in that moment the devil was with me. He brought your form with all its beauty before me; yes, and with love for me shining in your eyes. He shaped the thought in my mind. 'It is for her who might love you, you are saving him. Is she not worth the sin?' And as the tempter prompted me I said to myself: 'One half-hour's delay; a rest by the way; a fancied inability to proceed further; a mistake—so easy to make—in the road, and you were free once more, and might yet be mine. The price was crime—loss of honor, of self-respect, and all peace of mind; but you might be mine, and what price was too heavy to pay for that?' And as thought after thought, each like a devil from hell, came to me I leant against a gate, knowing as I did so that every moment I lingered risked a man's life. The sudden temptation, the commencement of the crime, the consequences to follow, the shame I felt, even then, bewildered me, and for a time I was beside myself. I seemed in a dream; all around me was unreal; the air seemed full of horrible forms and sounds. How long I waited motionless I can not tell—would that I knew!—it might have been moments, minutes or hours. At last it seemed as though I woke, and as I turned and ran like one pursued by wolves I fancied I heard the words, 'Too late! too late!' shrieked after me in fiendish glee. As I ran I believe I even ceased to think, and fell utterly exhausted at the door of the farm-house to which I mechanically directed my steps. In broken sentences I told my tale—I begged the men to hurry down with the ropes—I offered large rewards should they reach the coast in time to avert what I now shuddered to think might happen. They started with all possible dispatch, and as soon as my strength returned to me I followed. Gertrude, how can I pen the rest? I reached the fatal spot just as the men from the farm lowered one of their party over the edge of the cliff, and, as sick and dizzy I leant over, I saw beneath me the cruel waves dashing a dark form against the crueller rocks, and as one of the men turned to me and said, 'Poor chap! I we had been a quarter of an hour before, we might have saved him.' I knew that in the eye of God I was as much a murderer as the ruffian who drives his knife through the heart of his victim. Little wonder was it, as they bore his nerveless form to the top of the cliff; as I saw that pale face stained here and there with blood, the blue eyes yet open, and, as I almost fancied, seeking my own, that I fell as one dead upon the grass, and was borne away unconscious as the man I had foully slain.

"What more remains to be said? You know the rest—how the illness that followed was attributed to the shock I had undergone and the exertions I had used to save my friend. How people praised my presence of mind in at once starting for assistance. How you—even you—wrote kind words to me—words that cut my heart like knives. Yet no one knew that with me that night and day was the face of the dead, as I saw it ere I fell senseless on the cliff; that ever in my dreams I was running, it seemed to be, from an image of you and that fearful things were striving to stop me. No one knew how often I went to the spot where Gordon fell, and timed, as nearly as I could, the rising waters, to ascertain if it were possible for a man to have compassed the distance and brought aid in time to save him. Alas, I only learned I was a murderer in act as well as thought; I gained the prize that tempted me—but at what a cost! When, after some years, you gave me your hand, I knew your heart could never be mine, but lay in Gerald's grave; I know that the thing which at last induced you to accede to my repeated request was more the love you fancied I bore him than the love you felt for me. And so, as the price of a life's remorse, I won a woman whose love, in life, could never be mine, and who, after death must hate my memory.

"Ah, Gerald Gordon, slain by the waves at the bidding of your friend, just as the supreme joy of life was yours; your lot, after all, was happier than mine."

As she read the last words, Gertrude Blake dropped the manuscript, and burying her face in her hands, cried: "O, why did he tell me? why did he tell me? This is the worst of all to bear. Thank God, I have no children in whose faces I may see murderer written." Then with bitter grief and hatred in her heart, she sat on and on through the weary night. And ever before her was the image of Gerald Gordon, with the hungry waters creeping round him, his poor, maimed limbs battling in vain struggles to keep his life until the delayed help arrived. And her face was stern and cold as she pictured it. If her husband's hopes of heaven rested on her forgiveness she felt she could not bring her lips to frame the words.

She could scarcely credit the tale she had read; at times she fancied that it must have been in a great part imagination. But his face, ever sad, even when others were gayest, came again and again to her mind, and she felt that strange sadness stamped the confession with truth. Yet in all else he had been so noble, both in thought and in deed. He had loved her so; and now, with his dreary secret bared before her, even through the bitterness of her mind passed the knowledge that he had been leading not only a life of remorse, but also of atonement; and as she grew more calm, she fell at last into a troubled sleep, with wet tears upon her lashes.

And as she slept she dreamed. They stood before her she thought—her first and only love, Gerald, and her husband. The latter, not the careworn, prematurely old man of the past years, but young, gay, and handsome, as when he rode with Gerald to see her that morning in the winter. There was no sadness in his eyes now, and Gerald's arm was round his neck. "Sweet love," she heard him whisper, "see, I have forgiven—can not you likewise?" And then, striving to speak, she awoke.

With the dream yet lingering in her memory, she rose, and tearing the manuscript to shreds, threw it upon the smouldering fire. When every vestige of paper was consumed, she sought her room, but as she passed the chamber of death, entered, and bending over the pale, cold, placid face, kissed it, whispering: "I forgive, as I hope to be forgiven."—By the late Hugh Conway.

SURPLUS OF HORSES.

Why Farmers Should Avoid Keeping Poor Animals.

There are too many horses kept on the farm, perhaps not too many when their combined ability to do the work required of them is estimated, but too many in numbers, this being rendered necessary by want of adaptability to the work awaiting them. To keep six horses to do the work that might be done by four, is very poor economy, to say the least. Thus, a horse that lacks in a total of weight for a given piece of work, may consume as much food as one whose weight enables him to do the specified work with great ease. This would come of the better formed horse having, not only the proper bone development and well-rounded out muscles where he needed them, but corresponding vigor in his digestive and assimilative powers. Then, again, two draft horses of, say 1,400 pounds each, might so vary in their forms as to easily make a difference of one-fourth in the load that could be drawn by either.

The breeding of horses fit for fast work, in some degree, has been brought up to a better point. Unquestionably the breeding of draft horses has, to say the least, kept fully abreast of the other. This is shown by the fact that not more than one well bred draft horse in twenty fails to move with ease any load that is adapted to his size and weight, while not more than one in twenty thoroughbred or trotting-bred horses comes up to the hopes or expectations of those engaged in breeding them. This is, of course, a random estimate, but is it not in either case, under, rather than overstated? Predicting an opinion upon these facts, it is not necessary for any man to continue the use of inefficient horses upon the farm—or, for that matter, at any duty whatever—as in from four to five years from date of coupling if selections are wisely made, the entire increase of working age may be so changed and improved as to greatly change the model and improve the efficiency. The keeping of horses that are inadequate to do the work required with efficiency is fairly represented in the retaining of an inefficient set of hands on a given piece of work, where a less number, possessing greater adaptability, would do the work much more satisfactorily.—National Live Stock Journal.

REMARKABLE CHANGES.

Mississippi Steamboating Twenty Years Ago and To-day.

"I tell you," he said, throwing himself back in a heavy arm-chair, "the Mississippi is no longer what it used to be; the railroads have ruined it. There will be no more such steamers as the R. E. Lee, the Richardson or others of their class built. The steamers used to float all the cotton of the valley to New Orleans, and were built to carry from 5,000 to 8,000 bales. The week, however, which it required a steamer to take it down, is now reduced to twenty-four hours by rail. Railroads are following the course of the river, and robbing it of its trade, and I look forward to the day when the Mississippi River will be abandoned entirely in favor of rail.

"Yes," he continued, in answer to a question, "gamblers used to have a picnic along the river; but that day, too, is past. It is not because people have grown better, but because they have less money. I once saw two men in a dispute over a game, rise from their chairs, place their pistols at each other's temples, and fire simultaneously. Their dead bodies were carried away, and the game continued as if nothing had happened. Those were wild days, and are not likely to return.

"The mode of getting other people's money has merely changed in some respects. With the exit of the honest gambler who told his business, we witness the entrance of the sneak thief. But a few days ago a rich planter boarded this steamer off Natchez. While sitting right where we are now, he purchased a paper from a newsboy and was soon lost in its perusal.

"'Colonel,' said a bland young man, a few moments after, 'you have just dropped this,' handing him a fifty-dollar note.

"'I reckon not,' said the old gentleman, as he overlooked his spectacles.

"'I just picked it up under your chair,' replied the young man, 'and see no other way to dispose of it. However, since it seems to belong to neither of us, we might just as well divide it.'

"The plan worked well. The old gentleman passed over $25 in change, and the young man sauntered carelessly out on land. A few minutes after the vessel had taken to water the old gentleman presented the $50 note to the clerk in payment for his fare.

"'Counterfeit!' exclaimed the clerk, and then for the first time the whole truth dawned upon the old man's mind.

"The deckhands are a hard lot. They work, as you see, with a vim while in port, and pass the time until the next is reached in playing 'craps.' They are paid $3.50 a day. When they are called up to get their wages, they divide into little gambling parties at once, and by the time port is reached of the fifty men paid off, about ten will have all the money. This ten will take one night on land, coming back to the boats dead broke, and on the return trip there will not be a nickel in the whole crew. And the way they can go through a stranger," said the speaker, growing warm, "is a caution. A negro got on board at Vicksburg the other day and fell asleep. It was noticed that his underclothing was new. Quietly the men went to work, stripped him, divided out his underclothing, put him back into his old shoes, shirt and pantaloons, and left him. When that negro awoke and found the change which had been made in him, he was completely mystified. He could not understand how his underclothing could have been stolen without touching the rest."—Atlanta Constitution.

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

TWO TO MAKE A QUARREL.

There's a knowing little proverb,
From the sunny land of Spain,
But in Northland as in Southland,
Is its meaning clear and plain.
Lock it up within your heart—
Neither lose nor lend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

Try it well in every way,
Still you'll find it true.
In a fight without a foe,
Pray, what could you do?
If the wrath is yours alone,
Soon you will expend it.
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

Let's suppose that both are wroth,
And the strife begun,
If one voice shall cry for "Peace,"
Soon it will be done.
If but one shall span the breach,
He will quickly mend it.
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

WASPS.

How They Make the Material for and Build Their Nests.

"Oh, Uncle George, just come and see what Sam and I found!" exclaimed little Alfred, rushing into his uncle's study one bright Saturday morning.

Uncle George laid down his pen with a smile. "What have you found, Alfred?" he asked, as he rose to follow his little nephew.

"Well, I don't know exactly what it is, Uncle George," answered the little boy, leading his uncle through the garden. "It is a great big gray ball that looks as if it is made of paper, and it is fastened on a branch of the big apple tree down at the end of the orchard. Sam and I were going to throw stones at it, but we saw some wasps crawling over it, and we were afraid to."

"It is very well that you did not throw any stones at it," answered his uncle. "It is a wasps' nest, and if you had made them angry they might have stung you very badly."

They soon came to the tree, and Alfred pointed out the object of their curiosity to his uncle. It was an unusually large wasps' nest, and the insects were swarming in and out, looking quite formidable enough to deter any one from touching their fortress.

"Didn't you ever see a wasps' nest before, Sam?" asked Uncle George of his youngest nephew, who was seated on the fence viewing the wasps with curiosity mingled with a little fear.

"No, sir," answered Sam. "Uncle George, where do they get their nest?"

"They make it," was the answer.

Alfred and Sam looked at the nest in incredulous wonder. It did not seem possible that an insect as small as the wasp could build such a large nest.

"Why, it's made of paper, isn't it?" asked Sam, at length.

"Let us sit down here a little while and I will tell you how they make it. The wasps are furnished with broad, powerful mandibles, or pincers, and with these they tear off small particles of woody fiber from gate-posts, palings or the bark of trees. This they mix into a soft pulp with their saliva, and with this pulp they construct the nest. The inside of the nest is divided into little combs or cells, and the substance that separates these cells is generally thicker and firmer than that on the outside of the nest. As the nest is enlarged new paper is made for the purpose, the whole nest being inclosed in the last-made envelope, and the inner one is removed to make place for more cells.

"The nests of wasps in tropical countries are sometimes very large, often six feet long, and they are inhabited by very large families of wasps."

"How tough paper those big nests must take!" exclaimed Sam, who had been deeply interested in his uncle's account.

"Yes, paper making is the principal industry of these little insects," answered his uncle. "Each one of them has his own share of work to do, and so, little by little, the great nest is built."

"What do wasps eat?" asked Alfred.

"Wasps will eat a great variety of both animal and vegetable food," answered Uncle George.

"They will eat insects, ripe fruit, sugar, and they often invade bee-hives and steal the honey. There is a Brazilian species of wasp that is known to store up honey like bees."

"Aren't hornets and wasps very much alike?" asked Sam.

"Yes," answered Uncle George. "The hornet is the largest species of wasp, and found in the south of England. Now, boys, I must go back to my writing. I will leave you here to watch the wasps if you want to, and there is one very useful lesson that I hope you will learn from them."

"What is that, Uncle George?" asked the boys together.

"Remember that great things are made up of little ones," answered Uncle George. "One wasp alone could not build that great nest, but by each doing a little the work is accomplished."—S. S. Visitor.

JOHNNY'S FROG.

What He Gave for It, and the Kind of "Gra'm'thers" He Don't Think Much of.

Johnny looked over a fence and saw a boy by a pond. The boy was getting something out of the pond, and Johnny wondered what it was.

It wasn't a chicken, or a duck, or a goose, or a dog, or a cat. Johnny said to the boy:

"What's that?" And the boy said:

"Don't you know a bull frog when you see him? Ain't he a rouser, though? He's as big as a dog."

"Yes," said Johnny, "if the dog's a very little dog. I wish you'd let me have him."

"What will you give for him?" said the boy.

Johnny took everything out of his pockets. There was a top and five marbles and some shiny stones and a slate pencil and a broken bubble pipe and a pocket-book and a sleeve-button and a piece of gingerbread and a Sunday-school paper. The pocket-book had thirty-two cents in it. The boy said:

"I'll take that money if you'll give me the pocket-book, too."

So Johnny gave it to him, and he threw the frog over the fence. It gave a jump, and almost went over Johnny's head. Johnny was afraid it would get away, so he sat down by it and took hold of its hind leg. Then he called:

"Gra'm'ther! Gra'm'ther!"

Grandmother was sitting on the front porch. She came along to see what Johnny wanted. He said:

"Gra'm'ther, see my frog. Ain't he a beauty?"

"Ugh! Yes, dear, I suppose so."

"He keeps opening his mouth," said Johnny. "What's that for?"

"Perhaps he's hungry," said grandmother.

"What do frogs eat?" said Johnny.

"Oh, flies and bugs, I believe," said grandmother.

"Well, gra'm'ther," said Johnny, "won't you please to catch some flies for him?"

"Oh, I don't think I could, dear," grandmother said. And she went back to her knitting. Then Johnny called again:

"Gra'm'ther! Gra'm'ther!"

"Well, gra'm'ther, if you'll set here and hold him, I'll catch the flies. Just take him by the leg—so."

"Oh, my dear, I couldn't do it, indeed," said grandmother. And she went back to her knitting again.

So Johnny had to go himself and look for flies. Mr. Frog began hopping about the yard. Soon he jumped right up on the porch where the ladies were sitting.

They screamed and jumped almost as high as the frog. Bill, the stable boy, caught the frog and gave him a fling over the fence into the pond.

Johnny got there just in time to see him go splash into the water. He came and sat on a step, looking very mournful.

"I don't think very much of gra'm'thers that can't catch flies or hold frogs," he said.

Grandmother smiled and gave Johnny a kiss and a quarter. Then she went on knitting the red mittens with blue tops for Johnny when he makes snow-balls next winter.—Exchange.

TOO LATE.

The Remorse Which Is Sure to Follow Disrespectful Behavior Toward Parents.

A story is told as authentic of a young man in the Highlands of Scotland who became a drunkard, a gambler, and in the expressive Scotch phrase, "a ne'er-do well." His father owned a small farm which had been in the family for two hundred years. But to save Jock from the consequences of his misdoing, he was obliged to mortgage it, far beyond the possibility of redemption. The old man sank under the disgrace and misery, and died, leaving his wife, two or three children and worthless Jock. But the shock of his death brought the boy to his senses. He foreswore cards and whisky, came home and turned in to hard work. He toiled steadily for years. At last his mother was "struck with death."

Jock, now a middle-aged, grizzled farmer, stern and grave, was sent for in haste. He stood in silence by her death-bed a moment and then broke forth:

"Mither! mither! gin ye see feyther there, tell him the farm's our own agen. An' it's a' recht wi' me!"

The story reminds us of Dr. Johnson, who came when he was an old man of seventy to stand in the market-place of Uttoxeter, his gray head bare in the pelting rain, in bitter remembrance of some act of disobedience to his father on that spot when he was a boy.

But of what avail are these tears or acts of atonement when the old father or mother whom we have hurt and slighted so cruelly is dead? Do they see? Do they forgive? Who can say?

"It is only," said a mother lately, "since my own children speak to me with rudeness and contempt that I understand how great the debt was which I owed to my own mother and how poorly I paid it."

Many a gay girl who reads these words, who treats her mother as a member of the family who does the work of a servant without a servant's wages, or a lad who flings about the money which his old father is fast spending his feeble life to earn, will waken some day to utter their remorse in an exceeding bitter cry, to which, alas! there can come no answer!—Youths' Companion.

THE THIBETANS.

Men and Women Who Do Not Believe in the Free Use of Water.

The Thibetans who live in the valleys are not as a rule fine men physically, but the highlanders, or hill men, such as the shepherds, etc., up in the high Thibetan Mountains, are massive bons hommes, having somewhat the appearance of having been hewn out of solid blocks. The people of the valleys are more or less idle gossips, disliking work intensely. The men do not work in the fields except plowing, and few who can afford to pay another to do it for them will do even that much. When not in repose—i. e., when not absolutely doing nothing—the men occupy themselves by sewing, spinning, looking after the mules, horses and cattle, but above all in attending to the petty business of the family. The women sow, irrigate, weed, cut the harvest, thresh, winnow, carry the grain to the granary and do all the household work as well. If there are loads to be carried the women carry them. If a man be asked to carry a big case or heavy load he is certain, on seeing it, to say at once: "That! that's a woman's load," and of the baggage he will select the smallest parcel he can find as his burden. In the pasturages, the women milk, make the butter and look after the flocks when these are grazing near the tents or encampment. The men herd the flocks when grazing at a distance. The women ride as well as the men, and in the same fashion. From constantly throwing stones at the cattle the women are adepts at this, and can and do make it very unpleasant for any person who may have irritated them into putting their science into practice. Dirt is the ruling feature everywhere in Thibetan households. It pervades their houses and their persons, prevails in their customs, and gives a tone to and bears fruit in their speech. A European, an English official in India, once desiring to see the real color of the Thibetan skin, paid the parents of a child to have it washed in hot water, several waters, and with an unlimited supply of soap. Every effort was made in vain, the skin could not be reached through such an armor plating of dirt. It is said with every show of truth that it would be quite impossible to wash an adult Thibetan down to the skin. The beauty of a woman in Thibet consists in her being stout, broad thick-set and heavily membered, and the accomplishments to be desired are that she should be above all things audacious, a good hand at a bargain and at repartee; in fact, a typical Billingsgate virago, if massive enough, would pass as a Venus in Thibet.—Nineteenth Century.

Last Wednesday the supreme court decided that the Egan registration bill, passed at the last legislature, was unconstitutional.

The decision of the supreme court that the Egan law is unconstitutional leaves the old electoral system of Detroit intact, and the municipal officers may now proceed to spend the city's money on themselves and their henchmen.—Evening Journal.

The soldiers' home commission Tuesday morning adopted as plans for the home those presented by F. W. Hollister, of East Saginaw. The proposed building will be a brick, 250 by 112 feet. The main building, four stories high and basement, 110 feet to the base of the flagstaff. It will accommodate 400 persons. The commissioners the same afternoon changed the location of the soldiers' home to the Nelson farm, north of Grand Rapids, on the river bank, from the Burchard property near Reed's lake. The change is very satisfactory to the citizens. There will be no difficulty in raising funds to purchase the site. No conditions are exacted.

Portland, Me., Press: Some years ago a man by the name of Knowlton was postmaster at Liberty, a town in Waldo county in this state. Though an honest man, he was exceedingly careless in the management of the office. Rumors of his negligence coming to the ears of the postoffice department, Special Agent Carr was sent to investigate. Mr. Carr satisfied himself and the department that the rumors were true by walking into the postoffice one day when the postmaster was out and carrying off all the mail. Mr. Knowlton was given the choice between resignation and removal, and chose the former. He afterward became a Greenbacker and subsequently a Democrat. The other day, on the recommendation of the Hon. Simon S. Brown, chairman of the Democratic state committee, who was fully aware of all the facts in the case, Mr. Knowlton was appointed postmaster in the very same office from which he was turned out on account of negligence. It looks as if Mr. Brown might have another bone to pick with Assistant Postmaster General Stevenson.

If there were nothing else in the case of Attorney-General Garland and the suit to invalidate the Bell telephone patents, except the fact that Mr. Garland accepted a present of a million and a half dollars in stock for the use of his influence, that would be enough to condemn him. The great body of Democratic voters have been treated for years by Democratic orators to disquisitions on the sins of millionaires, patent monopolists, and all that sort of thing; and now that Attorney General Garland is proved to be a millionaire and a patent monopolist, not by his own industry or earnings, but by a gift to buy his influence, the effect of the scandal cannot fail to be disastrous. The gist of the Credit Mobilier scandal, over which the Democratic party made so great an ado, was that members of congress accepted gifts of stock in a company which expected to ask for legislation. But, in that scandal there was no instance so monstrous as that of Mr. Garland, while a senator of the United States, accepting as a gift of a million and a half dollar's worth of stock in a company which expected to be interested in a suit before the United States courts, and then seeking and accepting the office of attorney general of the United States in a "reform" cabinet, and having his department order this suit for the benefit of his company, at the expense of the government.—Post.

Nautical Phraseology.

To those who were interested in the contest between the Puritan and Genesta the following explanation of nautical terms may be of value:

"To Windward"—Towards that point from which the wind blows.

"To Work to Windward"—To make progress against the wind by tacking.

"To Tack"—To turn a ship by the sails and rudder against the wind.

"Leeward"—That point towards which the wind blows.

"By the Head"—When a ship is deeper in the water forward than aft.

"By the Stern"—Reverse of the former.

"By the Wind"—When a ship is as near the wind as her head can lie, with sails filled.

"Falling Off"—When a ship moves from the wind farther than she ought.

"Fore"—That part of the ship nearest the head.

"Fore and Aft"—The direction of the ship, or in the direction of the keel.

"Halliards"—Ropes to hoisten sails.

"To Heel"—Incline to one side.

"Lee Tide"—When wind and tide are the same way.

"Luff"—Put helm to leeward.

"Off and On"—Coming near the land on one tack and leaving it on the other.

"Starboard"—The right side.

"Port"—To the left side. This term is used to put the helm to left instead of the word larboard, to make a distinction from the affinity of sound in the word starboard.

"Stand On"—To keep in the course.

"Turning to Windward"—Tacking.

"To Wear"—To turn round from the wind.

A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, schr. Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and N. Y., had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only gave him instant relief, but allayed the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were similarly affected and a single dose had the same happy effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the standard remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner. Free Trial Bottles of this Standard Remedy at Dr. G. W. Crouter's Drug Store.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

"John," said the old man, as he laid down his paper and wiped his glasses, "we've got one boss with $500 of any man's money."

"Yes, father."

"We've got another who is half blind, and can't quite airn his keep."

"Yes."

"And a third who'd eat a common man poor inside of a year, and no good except to get up a neighborhood quarrel."

"That's so, father."

"Well, now what would be the result if we hitched them hosses up together. Wouldn't it spile the good one, instead of makin' $500 hosses of the others?"

"K'rect, father."

"But these 'ere tarnal railroads figger just the tother way. A line which kin possibly pay expenses an' make 2 cents fur stockholders mus' go an' hitch up with three or four lame an' blind consurns that can't pay fur axle-grease, an' the result is durnation all around, John."

"Yes, father."

Specialism in Medicine.

If specialists did not meet a distinct want they would soon be driven off the field. It is idle to inquire whether in this instance the demand created the supply, or vice versa; all that we are concerned with here is the fact that the public voice decisively approves of the existence of specialists. This is convincingly demonstrated as time goes on by the increasing confidence which is placed in their opinion and advice. A striking confirmation of this is afforded by the circumstance that when medical men have sickness in their own families they put prejudice aside and invoke the assistance of the despised specialist. In my own province it is my pleasure and my privilege to treat a large number of my professional brethren with whose personal ailments or those of their wives and children I am occupied during a considerable portion of each working day. Many other specialists are doubtless recipients of the like indisputable sincere form of compliment. The growing favor with which specialism is looked on by the public is also fully recognized by young physicians, and still more by successful general practitioners ambitious of emerging into the more rarefied atmosphere of consulting work. The press of competition is so fierce in the present over-crowded state of the medical profession that unless a man has some peculiar and decided advantage over the general run of his fellows he stands no chance of coming to the front. Something more is necessary nowadays for success in the higher walks of medicine than mere general ability. Supreme talent will, of course, ultimately find its level, unless kept down by accident or misfortune; but for the average clever man there is little prospect of brilliant success unless he has (or can persuade the world he has) the power of doing some particular thing better than any one else, or at any rate pre-eminently well.—Dr. Morell Mackenzie, in Fortnightly Review.

Pocket-knife making is practically dead in Naugatuck. A few years ago four factories were running to their fullest capacity, giving employment to hundreds of men, and supplying the country with thousands of gross of pocket cutlery annually. Not a single knife is being made to-day, and the chances are far from promising that the industry will ever be revived to any extent.

A New Orleans letter says a peculiarity of the young Southerner, male or female, is their early betrothal and eventful marriage, a condition that usually hinders undue dissipation, even if the desire exists. As a rule fewer divorce suits encumber the records of our courts than in the North, a reason for which I am at a loss to give, not believing that climate has any influence over it whatever.

A Charleston merchant says: "The long staple cotton raised on the sea islands of South Carolina seems to be very little in demand. Few planters have sold their last year's crop. This class of cotton was formerly used to adulterate silks, but all at once the demand for it has ceased, and no one is able to give a reason for it. It brought 40 cents a pound, three to four times as much as the other cotton, which, by the new and improved machinery, can be used for thread and other purposes almost as well as the long staple. I don't see what is going to become of our sea island planters unless they can find some new market for their yield, now that the silk manufacturers have found something cheaper to adulterate their goods with."

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—Many miners in the Newcastle (Eng.) collieries now work in safety electric lights.

—Scotland still contains seven millions of acres reserved for the amusement of deer stalkers and grouse shooters.

—The Castle of Buda, a home of Hungarian monarchy for centuries, is to be completely rebuilt by the Emperor Francis Joseph at a cost of $3,-250,000.

—Only one-third of the inhabitants of Vienna were born in the city. In Leipzig 36.50 per cent. are natives; in Munich, 37.32; in Berlin, 43.92; in Hamburg, 51.29; in Cologne, 57.15.

—There are no newsboys in Munich. Some of the papers are sold at round little houses or stands in the street, others are carried about the cafes and restaurants in baskets by old men and women.

—In an English town an infant fell from an upper story and landed upon the bustle of a lady's dress. A gentleman who was walking behind caught the little creature before it had time to roll off. The child was unharmed.

—The Berlin Medical Society has adopted the resolution proposed some time ago that measures be taken to secure the official authentication of all thermometers used by the profession in determining the temperature of the human body.

—One of the novelties at a late English dinner was a china dish containing cut bread, which had inserted in it a musical box. When the dish was lifted from the sideboard the box discoursed pleasant strains while it went its rounds, ceasing on being placed down again.

—A poor crofter who had scant pasture for his pet cow one day tethered her on the summit of a barren hillock on his bit of land where sand and stones were far more plentiful than vegetation, and looking around him, exclaimed: "Well, Rosie, if you haven't muckle to eat, you have at any rate a splendid view." —Scotch Paper.

—Mr. Gladstone is the owner of what is probably the longest pencil ever made. A manufacturer at Keswick has sent him a walking-stick thirty-nine inches long, made of cedar, and forming a large pencil, with a lead nearly half an inch square running through it. The curious pencil has a solid silver band bearing an inscription in verse.

—A new "everlasting" wood pavement has been brought out in France. The wood blocks are boiled in a solution of sulphate of copper, sulphate of zinc and chloride of sodium, mixed with a heavy mineral oil, linseed oil and tallow. The blocks are afterward compressed to about one-tenth their original volume. In this state they are said to be practically unwearable.

—A remnant of the great forests which once covered the south of Sweden was recently dug out of a bog at Kinneved, consisting of a boat six feet in diameter hollowed out of a log. The tree from which it was obtained must have been twenty feet in circumference. The wood, which was blue in color, was very hard, and the boat so heavy that two bullocks could not move it.

—John Bright recently declared that the resources of the nations of Europe were being "swallowed up by the insatiable exigencies of the militarism in which they live." Last year the armies and navies of Europe cost the enormous sum of $917,500,985, while the national debts absorbed the sum of $1,036,169,075 for interest alone, the aggregate national debts reaching the almost inconceivable amount of $23,-011,949,70[illegible]. At the head of the list stands Russia, whose army and navy estimates reached $230,512,500, and the interest on her national debt $168,-[illegible]. France, England and Germany come next in the order named.

DYNAMITE GUNS.

Their Introduction Equivalent to an Entire Change of Naval Defense.

The fearful ravages wrought by the explosions of dynamite leave no one unable to conjecture what might be the consequence of a bombardment in which missiles charged with dynamite should be employed. The difficulty has also been easy to anticipate. The shock of explosion of the gun-charge would, under the old system, in all probability, fire the shell-charge, dynamite being easily exploded by mechanical shock, and the gun and shell might naturally be expected to destroy the gunners rather than the enemy. The Americans, who seem rather fond of trying the supposed impossible, first began to experiment on dynamite missiles, and an officer of the American navy contrived what may be called a colossal air gun, in which the shell charged with dynamite might be started on its flight with an easy but accelerating motion, avoiding the shock so certainly productive of premature explosion, and obtaining by a high air pressure through a long bore the velocity requisite. The idea had been foreshadowed by the Lyman accelerating gun which starting the shot with a small charge, followed it up by successive explosions of accelerating charges placed along the bore, and giving it the highest initial velocity ever attained by any gun. The Lyman gun failed as might have been anticipated, through the weak spots introduced into the system by the mechanical arrangements for securing the accelerating charges from exploding prematurely or not exploding at all, and the great relief given to the gun by the modification of the explosive qualities of the powder has probably put an end to the experiments in accelerating charges. The success of the experimental air-gun in throwing to effective distances shells filled with dynamite or even nitro-glycerine was such that a gun of eight-inch calibar and calculated to throw a shell three miles was planned. It was perfectly correct in my theory, and was made apparently on the only safe method, but while the scientific officer who conceived it was following out the development of his system by mathematical calculations, one of the more characteristic practical inventors had attacked the problem from the other side. Instead of making his propelling force more elastic he gave the elasticity to his missile and by a wad or cushion of caoutchouc of the requisite quality so took up the first impulse given by the explosion that a shell filled with dynamite was fired with complete safety, and an effect which can be imagined more easily than calculated. A shell fired from an ordinary battery gun and carrying eleven pounds of dynamite striking a [illegible] formed the target blew out a cavity [illegible] in diameter and six feet deep. No fuse is required, as the shell explodes by concussion as it hits its mark, and it was easy to perceive that a single shell of this description striking the side of the most solid iron-clad in existence near the water-line would be likely to send her to the bottom.

Thus far no accident is reported in the experiments, which are to be if they are not by this time, repeated with guns of much heavier caliber. But the caliber of the gun is of secondary importance, as range and the capacity of the shell for carrying dynamite are the chief elements to calculate on, and if a shell carrying one hundred pounds of the explosive can be fired from one of the heavy guns now in use, the first hit decides any conflict as between single ships, and one of our steel unarmored cruisers will yield no quicker than the inflexible to the shock of such an explosion.

The prospect of such a change in the condition of warfare is appalling, and the only consolation which civilization can draw from it is that it is always the defence that profits most. It is true that comparatively small gunboats carrying one large gun might approach by night, or even by day, near enough to a seaport to throw several dynamite shells into an inhabited city, and with a devastating effect which recent events can suggest, and the boats themselves being small and swift may be very difficult to hit, while the city can hardly be missed; but the land defenses have not only the faculty of employing heavier artillery and of longer range, but of working with much greater accuracy and safety and much less expense, as an accident with dynamite, such as premature explosion of a shell, will sink a ship, but would be attended with but slight damage to works or men in an open battery, and such accidents will always be more likely to happen at sea than on shore. A flotilla of small unarmored boats, each carrying one heavy gun, will, thus armed and aided by shore defenses, defy in defence any ironclad fleet that can be formed to-day, and as the boats and guns are already in existence, any rifled gun being available, as the entire novelty is in the shot, it is possible that we may see ironclads out of fashion, and the navies of the whole civilized world running to the opposite extreme from that lately resorted to, and building the smallest gunboats that can safely carry a gun. It is rash to conclude anything on such novel conditions, but one thing is clear—that if from a gun of moderate caliber a shot can be fired which shall crush in the side of any ironclad in existence the work of a shot will be wisely expended in getting range with accuracy alone, and it may be necessary to make new calculations for the construction of the most efficient type of gun, while ironclads will be considered as for more speculative investments. A long gun of relatively small calibre and carrying a long shot would seem in such circumstances to be the gun of the future.—London Times.

ON PIKE'S PEAK.

Hard to Climb—Sickness on the Mountain Top.

Sliding down bannisters is nothing compared to riding up Pike's Peak. You and your steed are a very leaning Tower of Pisa, and it often happens that if you look back you can not see the hinder part of your horse at all. Coming down from the peak it is all the other way. The patient, groaning horse's haunches rise like a ladder, nearer Pike's Peak behind your shoulders; you dare not let your frightened eyes traverse the shelving precipice between the pony's ears, and the beast progresses with a motion that makes you feel you are sitting upon the mouth of a most active volcano. With every step the sensation is that of being fired out of the mouth of a short range gun.

At the top of the peak we had a variety of experiences. One poor man of our party looked like a collapsed telescope, and sat dismally on a stone in the snow and looked and felt homesick. Gone was his genial smile, his cheery jest, his good natured jibe, his catching bon homme. "Oh girls," he cried, looking about on the assembled womankind, "I'm awfully sick." Pike's Peak sickness must be contagious. After that the "Peakers" dropped like spent shot. First one would faint away and be laid out, then another would turn livid green and creep off to be seasick in isolated agony. We stretched the sick ones out flat on their backs, put camphor to their noses—cruelly reminded them that they were only 13,300 above New Orleans, that it was raining down in Manitou, looked as if it were hailing down at the halfway house and that a driving snow storm was raging on the peak itself. True enough the thermometer was down to thirty-two degrees, and the gray winds howled, the clouds closed in about the desolate yellow mountains head, and a wild and furious snow storm set in, covering the rough and cruel stones, casting the signal house in a garment of snow, and laying in soft glistening ridges and furrows on the ladies' wraps and the men's great coats.

The sensation at the Peak is of being in a vacuum. You look at your neighbor and see him in an etherealized sort of way. You seem and he seems to be distinctly different from yourself in less exalted regions. The atmosphere is like a crystal, and you are the center of it. I defy anybody to tell a lie on top of Pike's Peak. I believe the lonesome solemn place, where for all the world you can scarcely get air enough to breathe, to be a very palace of truth. —Cor. N. O. Picayune.

Begin Early.

"Education commences at the mother's knee, and every word spoken within hearsay of little children tends toward the formation of character." Endeavor always to talk your best before your children. They hunger perpetually for new ideas. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they deem it drudgery to study in books; and, even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of many educational advantages, they will grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people. We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every community which they enter, dull, silent and uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first use what they have for their own households. A silent home is a dull place for young people—a place from which they will escape if they can. How much useful information, on the other hand, is often given in pleasant family conversation, and what unconscious, but excellent mental training in lively, social argument. Cultivate to the utmost the graces of conversation.—Boston Budget.

DIFFERENCE IN METHOD.

Why Russia Experiences Less Trouble With Subjugated Asiatic Peoples Than Great Britain.

The establishment, by the Russian Government, of branch banks in the Central Asian towns of Khiva and Bokhara, illustrates, perhaps better than any other incident could, the difference between England and Russia in dealing with the half savage peoples of Asia. Although each is known in that continent only as a conquering power, although the methods of each in spreading its dominion have been force and fraud in about equal degrees, and neither scrupled to deceive an enemy or betray a friend whenever a point was to be gained by so doing, the success of the two has been widely different. Russia has not only acquired much more territory than England, but, after its acquisition, it is the source of less trouble. Revolts sometimes occur in Russian Asia, but they are always of purely local origin, are confined to narrow limits, and are suppressed with very little difficulty. Nor does it appear that there is ever felt by the Russian officials any of that constant dread which makes official life in India not worth the living.

The difference is certainly remarkable, but a reason for it is easily found. The Russian Government is rough and unscrupulous in acquiring territory and subjugating peoples, but after the land has once passed under Russian control, it becomes in every sense of the word a portion of the Russian Empire, and its people become Russians. Russia, therefore, has no conquered provinces, one part is just as much Russia as another, and the deputy from Khiva kneels at the throne of the Czar, side by side with the deputy from the Baltic Provinces, while the Lapp and the Turkoman fight shoulder to shoulder in the Russian army, and the promotion of one for gallantry is just as assured as that of the other. There is thus developed in the Empire a sort of national spirit, a pride in the name of Russia, which inspires the Asiatic savage with a new feeling: from being a member of a petty, wandering horde, he has become a citizen of a mighty Empire; he wears the uniform and fights under the eagles of the "Great White Czar;" from depending upon robbery he receives pay; he may even become a General and nobleman of the Empire.

In India there is not the slightest trace of anything of the kind. India is conquered territory, and every day, in a thousand ways, the Indians are made to feel their subordination. They are subjects, and no effort is apparent to conceal the fact. While there has been a marked improvement in their condition since the English conquest, they feel no gratitude for what is done for them, since the English self-interest prompted the military holders of the country to improve it, it being more profitable to have slaves in good than in poor condition. The army is Indian, but no man of native birth has any chance for more than the humblest promotion, and thus there is no spur of incentive to excellence either on the drill-ground or in the field. The result of this national policy is seen in the continual stirrings of revolution. England is educating the Indians after a fashion, and the enlightenment they receive is just sufficient to make them thoroughly dissatisfied. Russia makes her conquests Russian without taking the trouble to teach them anything further: England is busy giving liberal training to millions of slaves who are all the more rapidly becoming imbued with the idea that they are under a despotism from which they should be glad to escape.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE OLD-FASHIONED GIRL.

She does not work, she does not paint
Kensington patterns odd and quaint,
A crazy quilt she ne'er hath made,
Nor stork on tidy yet essayed.

She can not boast a cultured ear;
Beethoven's symphonies, I fear,
She'd call a bore, nor care one bit
What Mrs. Grundy said of it.

She does not poke her elbows out,
Or paint her lips in scarlet pout,
Or smoke her eye-brows to a curve
As fascinating lures to serve.

She does not wear her sleeves so tight
She has to set her hat aright
Before she gets inside her dress
(As fashionable dames confess).

She's fond of horses and of big
And noble dogs; no canine prig
Or bloated and conceited pug
To lie upon æsthetic rug.

She never could be bought or sold;
Her love is worth a nation's gold.
And who the favored one? Ah, well,
I would seem like boasting should I tell.

A GIRL WIFE.

The Old Bachelor Curate of Amberly.

It was a beautiful young American girl, Lettice Lee by name, who sojourning among her English friends for awhile, crossed their fair garden, bright with the tender greens of Spring and all abloom with hawthorn, and, tempted by the shadows of the lane beyond, strolled slowly down it, until, coming to an old church set about with trees and flanked by an ancient graveyard, she entered there and wandered among the mossy stones, reading their quaint inscriptions and thinking such thoughts as youth and beauty do of graves and death—thinking pityingly and with a certain sad tenderness, but not as of anything with which she had to do, or even would.

The willows were very old. The shade was very deep. The gray church flung its own dark shadows on the spot. The ivy of centuries draped its walls.

It was so different from anything the girl who had come from the land where all the fine buildings have a brand new look, and even the ivy that is trained against church-walls speaks of a geometrically-minded gardener had seen, that it fascinated her. She was romantic and poetical, and it is very hard to be romantic in America.

She leaned against a great tree, and looked down upon the gray gravestones. Most of them were so old that no one lived to deck them any more. And yet the ages written on them were often less than her own was that day. One at her very feet bore this inscription:

"Here lieth Lucy—aged sixteen."

A tear came into the girl's eyes as she read it. Perhaps more would have followed, but at that moment a voice close beside her broke the silence.

"You are looking at the graves, my dear. These are only humble stones. Inside the church there are some very fine tombs. If you would like to see them I can tell you all that is known of them. I have been curate of Amberly for thirty years."

The girl turned toward the speaker. Thirty years! That was nearly twice her whole life. A very old man this must be to speak of thirty years as a mere portion of his.

She looked up into his face and answered back the kind smile that shone upon it, and felt a thrill of wonder at the sweetness in the eyes and on the lips, for in her short experience old men were generally either harsh or testy, or at least cold or unsympathizing.

She had no father, or grandfather, or any aged relatives. A little woman, something of an heiress, and very beautiful, she had always been petted by her friends, and had never been unhappy, but of strong home ties that are dear even the old and the ugly, she knew nothing. An old gentleman was some one who did not like noise and was rather averse to music, whom it was not unpleasant to see go out of the room, and who generally paid the bills for somebody.

She gave the curate another smile, and said: "Yes, she would like much to see the church and the tombs. Her name was Lettice Lee, and she was visiting Mrs. Holden, at the mansion yonder, and she was just from America for the first time. Perhaps he knew," and the curate signified that he did know, and that Mrs. Holden was his dear old friend, and they went into the church together.

There are old faces that are more beautiful than any young ones can be. Not many, it is true; for the evil passions of our race—anger and greed, and malice and jealousy—are strong within too many breasts, and mark themselves outwardly upon the features through the long, slow years of a long life, too deeply. Griefs also line themselves upon the brow, and hollow out the cheeks and dim the eyes, but now and then some one, alike strong and sweet, putting by the sin and bearing the sorrow patiently, comes to the autumns of existence with such a countenance as, it seems to me, God meant that an old man should have. The curate of Amberly had done this.

The old bachelor curate had no reminiscences to make of youth sweet, no memory of a young head pillowed on his breast, or fond hands that had clasped his.

Somehow, he thought of this as he ushered the young girl into the old church. She was so fair, and delicate and sweet—her movements were so gentle! A daughter like this now—a ——. He checked the fancy, put it away with a smile, and walked on among the tombs.

On the tomb of Lady Margaret a sculptured form lay with clasped hands and closed eyes. On that of Sir Percival Percy knelt a mailed warrior at prayer. Not more cold and silent and at rest were these than had been the love that should have warmed that good life; and still, with closed eyes, love slumbered in the American girl's breast. They looked at Lady Margaret, at Sir Percival, at the gray tablets in the floor, and the white ones on the wall; at the painted windows and at the strange old Bible and the ancient prayer-books; at the fine carving on pulpit and pews. They talked a great deal to each other, and when, at last, she left the church to take her way homeward, he said to her:

"If you should feel like reading, I have a tolerable library, and, though I am an old bachelor, my housekeeper, Mrs. Pratt, is a very good old woman, and will do her best to oblige you in every way. This is my little home, you know," and he pointed to the tiny house that hid itself among the trees.

She thanked him and went her way, full of new softness, and he looked after her.

"I should have liked so very much to kiss her," he said to himself.

It was the first time he had said it of any woman even thus, and the blood flew to his smooth brow as he spoke, and he blamed himself very much; for he knew it was no fatherly kiss of which he thought, did that old curate.

And so strange, sweet friendship grew into existence. The difference in their ages and his office gave them privileges else impossible in decorous England. Lettice could walk and talk with that old curate as much as she chose, and she chose to do it a great deal. The library was an excuse, and there was the garden, and what more proper than that she should go to evening prayer?

And the old curate began very soon to watch for her; to count the moments of her absence, and to know that that which had never come to him in youth had come to him in age; too late for him to taste its sweetness, but not too late to feel the bitterness that love must ever bring when it is nothing but an unrequited longing.

Oh, if he could but keep her thus! he said to himself. If only she could love no one else. And they might be friends forever. Then he could be happy. But this could not be. Young, sweet, beautiful, some one must claim her soon. She would be the wife of a young man. She would love him, and have for the old curate only a kind memory.

All that she knew was that he was graver, and that he did not seem to like her as well as he had done at first. This troubled her, and at last moved her to shun the old library and even the church, and she even shed tears sometimes, wondering how she had offended him. So, in the end, they saw little of each other, and thought a great deal; but his heart gave a wild throb when one day he heard that Lettice Lee was going home to America.

"Would she go without bidding him adieu?" he asked himself. "Would it not be better that she should?" But she did not. She could not. He had been too kind to her, even though he were cold to her now. One morning she came.

She opened the door of his library as he sat staring at a blank of sermon paper, thinking of no text, unless it were this: Love is strong as death, and jealousy is as cruel as the grave, and coming up to him put out her little hand and said, softly:

"I have come to bid you good-by, sir. I am going away."

He took the hand and arose and led her to a seat, and then they sat quite silent for a while. It was not right for an old heart to beat so fast, and he knew it. At last he spoke.

"I am sorry. I knew that you must go, but I am very sorry."

She gave a little start, and looked full into his eyes. What she saw there two tears that quivered on the lashes made her put both her little palms upon his arm.

"Sorry?" she said. "Oh, are you really sorry, sir? I—I thought you did not like me any more—that I bored you with my chatter; and so I kept away."

Two hands upon his arm, two blue eyes fixed upon his own, a sweet, quivering red mouth parted with such childish sweetness—do you wonder that the man forgot that he was an old curate?

People are really never old, you know; only this fleshy dwelling of theirs decays, not the heart—the soul. He forgot his gray hairs and his fifty-five years of life, and in a moment he stood almost transfigured before her, flushed with youth's color, bright with love's passion.

"Oh, my little girl, my little girl!" he cried. "Could you not see? Did you not know? Sorry! Ah, when you leave me you take my life with you. I, who never loved any one before, love you madly. My little one, my darling!"

And then it passed. The truth came to him. He turned from her; his face grew gray. He flung himself into a chair and hid his face.

"Good-bye," he faltered. "Forget what the foolish old man has said, and don't think ill of him."

He did not look at her, but he heard the rustle of her dress upon the floor. He felt her close to him. He knew that she knelt down beside him, and again the little hand touched him.

"Good-bye," he faltered.

Then he heard her sobbing and bent over her.

"My child, do you weep for the old man?" he said. "You weep and do not laugh. God bless you."

And a choked voice answered:

"I cry because I am happy. I did not want to go away. I want to stay with you. People that are nice are always nice, even if they are old. I only wonder you could like a little thing like me—so silly and so young—but I am very glad you do."

And then he opened his arms and she crept close to his breast, and he held her there, and whatever people said when the bans were published in Amberly Church, it was no sacrifice: for within that old breast and that young one dwelt unaccountably the twin souls whose bodies should have been of the same age, and no two married people ever loved more fondly than the curate and his girl wife.—Mrs. Burnett.

The Zero Mark.

Ninety-nine citizens out of one hundred had something to say about "zero" last winter: perhaps not one in one hundred could have told offhand why a point thirty-two degrees below the freezing point on Fahrenheit's thermometer is called zero. For that matter nobody knows. The Fahrenheit scale was introduced in 1720. Like other thermometric scales, it has two fixed points—the freezing point, or rather the melting point of ice, and the boiling point of water. The Centigrade and Reaumur call the freezing point zero and measure therefrom in both directions. This is a very natural arrangement. Fahrenheit kept the principle on which he graded his thermometers a secret, and no one has ever discovered it. It is supposed, however, that he considered his zero—thirty-two degrees below freezing—the point of absolute cold or absence of all heat, either because, being about the temperature of melting salt and snow, it was the greatest degree of cold he could produce artificially, or because it was the lowest natural temperature of which he could find any record. The grounds on which Fahrenheit put one hundred and eighty degrees between the freezing and boiling points are likewise unknown.—Baptist Weekly.

HOW IT TASTED.

She was a maid of many charms,
As lovely as the rose;
She held her poodle in her arms
And fondly kissed his nose.

Her lover lying at her feet,
Was envious as could be,
And said: "Oh, give a kiss as sweet
As that, my love, to me!"

She stooped and kissed him on the lips,
Then sprang he to his feet,
She, blushing to her finger tips,
Inquired: "Well, was it sweet?"

He wiped his mouth, picked up his cane,
And then prepared to jog,
Remarking: "Sweet? Well, to be plain,
It kind o' tastes of dog."

A SCHOOL MA'AM FARMER.

Farmer Thistlepod's Account of Her Manner of Running Various Agricultural Implements—Her Departure a Great Loss to the Farm.

Editor of the Eagle: Noticin' in your columns quite recent a paragraph to the followin':

"Miss Ella Witchazel, a charming young school teacher of Vittlsea, Ia., finding the close confinement and arduous duties of the school-room injuring her health, tried the out-door cure. Instead of spending her winter's salary and summer vacation in a crowded hotel at the seashore, she went on a farm, cut twenty-five acres of prairie hay, harvested forty acres of wheat, gained twenty pounds in weight, a coat of tan for her hands and face, and a rugged health that can not be equaled anywhere off a farm. There's the girl you are looking for, young man."

Now, what I want to say: I am well aquainted with this young school-marm. Fact is it was my farm she spent the summer on. Nice girl, Ella is, as ever run wild in the sun. We was glad, wife an' me, to have her come, an' she did 'bout as she pleased on the farm. I'd often read in the papers 'bout these young women that taught school in the winter an' farmed in the summer, but I never had any experience of 'em before.

Well, sir, she farmed. First day, nothin'd do but she must drive the hoss rake. Well, every man an' woman that comes from town wants to drive the hoss rake, an' they call that sittin' in the hay. My little Janey, eleven years old next May, usually drives the rake for us, but she ain't ben feelin' overly peart this summer an' I kinder kept her out of the sun. So Miss Ella gits herself boosted up on the hoss rake—my boy Joe he boosted her—an' then she screamed an' fell off. Then she got on agin, hit the hoss a crack an' away she went on the dead jump out o' the field into the road, hoss a goin', dust a flyin' an' Miss Ella screechin'. Some of the men headed her off an' stopped the hoss. Then she tried it agin. This time she struck right straight through the standin' grass where it was tallest an' thickest and tangledest; hoss a balkin' and tuggin' away by turns, grass holdin' on or comin' up by the roots, rake teeth a snappin'. We got her out of that, and lost a whole day on the rake, gettin' it mended.

Then she tried drivin' a load into the big barn. Had to send to the house for a ladder, an' then all the men had to go clear out of the field while she climbed up on the load. Drivin' in she got the wagon caught in a hedge gap as wide as the Missouri River, run over two stand of bees, upset the load and buried herself under three hundred pounds of hay. It was the safest place for her under the excitin' circumstances, so we jest left her ther' until the bees got cammed down an' we got some work done. Next load she went in on, and then turned all of the men out of the barn while she climbed up into the mow, an' then she wandered around until she stepped into a chute and shot down about twenty-eight feet into the cow barn an' lit right on the back of a Jersey calf that was worth $250 of any man's money an hour before. Miss Ella wa'n't killed, but she was that jammed up that she lay in bed two days, an' but for that providence we'd hev ben workin' at that hay yet. An' anybody that wants a broken back calf can have one at his own figgers.

Well, come wheat harvest, she must drive the self-binder. That was a leetle too risky, but she had her own way. But she couldn't be trusted up above the knives, so somebody had to set up there an' hold her on. My boy Joe, he held her on—I told Joe she was a makin' a fool of him—an' if she didn't make him drive around every [illegible] an' every blossomin' weed she see in that field to save it. Never mind the wheat, but save the blamed weeds. There was only one stump on that three hundred and twenty acres of prairie land, just one stump, an' I hope I may go to seed before Thanksgivin' if that girl didn't run into it an' break the reaper. Lost all the rest of that day a mendin' of it.

Next day, she was that proud an' confident she could drive alone. Well, we tied her into the seat so's't she couldn't fall off an' she started. Two rod from the start a big, black snake stuck up his head—an' you know how slick them knives amputate a snake? Miss Ella, she gives a faint little squeak, an' faints dead away. My boy Joe—he's always hangin' around—he jumped for the horses, took Miss Ella down and carried her to the house. Money, nor healthy tan, nor rugged appetite, nor nothin' couldn't coax Miss Witchazel into that field agin, an' we got through harvestin' all right. Land, how the men laffed. And yet, we all liked the girl. But the idee of her farmin'. Why, do you know, sir, one day in hayin', she went to town—took one of my best work hosses an' was gone all day, an' came home with 'bout twenty yards of blue and white ribbons, and tied 'em on the men's hats and the rake handles, and wanted us all to wear biled shirts, with the sleeves looped up with blue ribbon, go marchin' out to the hayfield, me at the head with the most and longest ribbons, a singin': "We merry haymakers, tra, la, la, la, la!" She saw it done that way once in a concert or theayter an' thought that was the way hayin' was always done. An' she was so vexed that she cried when we wouldn't wear 'em.

Law, when I put on that [illegible] an 'laid back and laughed till the tears ran down her dear old cheeks. "Job Thistlepod," she said, "if you'll go out an' work in that rig, you'll scare away the grasshoppers." "My boy, Joe, he did wear his [illegible] but he hid it under the [illegible] got out of sight of the house. I told Joe he was the biggest fool I ever see.

Well, Miss Ella got along fairly well after wheat harvest. Gathered some graceful sprays, she called 'em, of poison ivy one day, and couldn't see out of one eye for nigh a week. One day she took a tin pail to go out after berries, and when she went through the cow pasture the cows thought there was salt in the pail and chased her till she was nigh ready to drop. And she went to the barn once an' tried to harness a young Texan colt that had never had a halter on him, an' how she got out of the stable alive's more'n I can tell. But what I wanted to say is that that's about the way the young women who farm so graceful in the newspapers usually farm on the farm. But we liked her. An' we hated to see her go. An' she will make a splendid wife for some man, if she can't run a farm, but I don't know about your young men comin' out to look after her, for when she said good-bye to me to go back to town, she throwed her arms around my neck an' give me a kiss that I says to my boy Joe, standin' by the wagon to take her to town, he was always somewhere around: "Joe," I says, "You'd give your share in the farm for that," an' Joe he didn't seem to care for anything of the kind, an' Miss Ella, she up an' give me another squeezin' an' a kiss an' I saw her looking over my shoulder at my boy Joe and—haw! haw! haw!—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

A DECIDED BARGAIN.

Why a Detroit Citizen Was Anxious to Negotiate a Loan.

"Say! for heaven's sake lend me two cents!" he gasped, as he rushed into a saloon near the foot of Jefferson avenue yesterday.

"Lend you two cents?"

"Yes, yes! All I want is two cents."

"See you hanged first!"

"Say! lend me two cents!" exclaimed the man, as he rushed out the door and nearly upset a pedestrian with a satchel.

"I'll give you two kicks instead!" replied the man as he recovered his balance, but the other had skipped across the street to importune the driver of an express wagon. He was finally asked what he wanted of the money, and he explained:

"I was over at the depot. Fellow with a big neck rubs agin me. I tells him to look out. He says he will lick me for two cents. I feels in all my pockets, but I haven't a red. Just imagine my embarrassment!"

"You'd better drop the matter."

"What! when I haven't had a fight for seven months, nor been licked for two years! Never! It's the cheapest offer I ever had, and I'll accept it if I have to steal the money!"

And he continued his way up the street and halted every pedestrian to appeal: "Say! if you have any mercy on a poor, forlorn man, lend me two cents!"—Detroit Free Press.

He Had Cause for Alarm.

What C. O. D. Stands For.

"What's the meaning of C. O. D.?"

"Collect on delivery."

"Well, I kind o' suspicioned it meant something like that."

"You did?"

"Yes; I got a box by express the other day with them letters on it, and I had to pony up before they'd let me take it, and from that I ciphered it out that they meant 'Come Omediately Down.'"—Chicago Ledger.

A Happy Death.

A negro living on Onion Creek came to Austin recently, and the following conversation occurred between him and a city friend:

"How is Pete Jackson?"

"He is done dead."

"Yer don't tole me so. How did hit come about?"

"He died wid digesshun ob de lungs, but surrounded wid de bes' wishes ob de hull neighborhood."—Texas Siftings.

His Guilty Conscience.

"Here's a strange phenomenon, hubby."

"What's that, my dear?"

"This paper tells of a night-blooming cereus in Massachusetts that blooms in the daytime."

"Well, that is rather paradoxical."

"Yes, dear, and do you know I've noticed lately a great many evidences of night turning into day."

"My darling, I hope you will not permit your insinuations to become personal."—Chicago News.

TRICKS ON THE TRACKS!

Dangers from Which Engineers Save the Public and Themselves.

[illegible] This is [illegible] A Nickle Plate engineer after his very first trip was laid off because he had "cut out" all the bearings of his engine. He was reinstated, however, after he proved that some rival had filled his oiling can with emery. Another new engineer was surprised to find [illegible] of his boiler. Through grief at the loss of his position he died, and then a conscience-stricken rival confessed that he had put oil in the tank so that it would fly and showed water at the top gauge, when in reality there was scarcely a quart in the boiler!

These intense jealousies, together with the terrible anxiety incident to their work, have a terribly straining effect on the nerve, and statistics tell us that, though Locomotive Engineers may look strong and vigorous, they are not all a healthy class. Ex-Chief Engineer A. E. Hampton, Indianapolis, Ind., (Div. 143) was one of those apparently hearty men, but he says: "The anxiety, strain and jolting came near finishing me." His sufferings localized in catarrh of the bladder, but he used Warner's safe cure faithfully for twenty weeks and now exclaims: "I am a well man." [illegible] of Cleveland, O., Assistant Chief Engineer, and other prominent members are also emphatic in its praise.

The Locomotive Engineers' Brotherhood has 17,000 members and 240 divisions. Its headquarters are in Cleveland, O., where Chief Engineer Arthur for twenty years has exercised almost dictatorial sway. It was organized in August, 1863, by the employes of the Michigan Central. It has given nearly two million dollars to the widows and orphans of deceased members.

Prof. Trilobite (eloquently): "Yes; all things came by chance, and the great globe itself, [illegible] sprang up in the night." Little Bessie Brightsyes: "I should like to know, please, sir, where the seed came from."

was the way it appeared in the proof-slips. The argus-eyed proof-reader, however, knew the quotation intended and changed it to read: "Shoot Folly as she flies."—Pope. Of course it was an error, yet how many are daily committing much graver errors by allowing [illegible] consumption to go unheeded. If afflicted with loss of appetite, chilly sensations, or hacking cough, it is suicidal to delay a single moment the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the great and only reliable remedy yet known, for this terribly fatal malady. "Laugh and Grow Fat," is a precept easily preached, but not so easy to practice. If a person has no appetite, but a distressing nausea, sick-headache, dyspepsia, bolls, or any other ill resulting from inaction of the bowels, it is impossible to get up such a laugh as will produce aldermanic corpulence. In order to laugh satisfactorily you must be well, and to be well you must have your bowels in good order. You can do this and laugh heartily with Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," the little regulators of the liver and bowels and best promoters of jollity.

There is no cause for congratulation to the stockholders only—there is a larger and wider constituency which will be gratified at this evidence of prosperity; for "The Great Rock Island Route" (as it has generally come to be known) has made itself "solid" with the traveling public. It is ever wide-awake to the interest and comfort of its patrons, and they naturally consider any success it may have as being well deserved.

AN EVENTFUL CRUISE.

Return of the Revenue Cutter Corwin from the Arctic Seas—Nearly Two Hundred Whalers Rescued After Intense Sufferings—Twenty-Five Sailors Lost—Explorations of the Corwin's Crew.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 13.—The United States revenue-cutter Corwin returned from Alaska yesterday with 192 wrecked seamen aboard. She reports that the New Bedford whaler, Napoleon, was sunk in the Arctic Ocean, and that twenty-two of her crew, including the first and third mates, are undoubtedly lost. The crew, thirty-six in number, abandoned the ship in four boats—nine in a boat and kept together one day and a night. The next day the boats separated in a fog. On the morning of the fourth day the Corwin picked up one of the boats with eight persons alive and one dead. In the afternoon another boat was picked up with six of the occupants alive. The two other boats were never seen again. Those rescued suffered intensely of cold and hunger. Joaquin Khlus had his feet badly frozen, and the captain of the bark amputated his toes prior to his rescue.

The Corwin also reports that the whalers Mabel and George and Susan, owned in Marblehead, Mass., were blown ashore in Wainwright's Inlet August 10, and William Lee, cooper, August Wilhelm and James Evans, seamen, of the Susan's crew, were lost. The others were taken off by the Corwin and the cargo of the Susan was transferred to the bark Ohio.

During the gale the Corwin sent a boat to the whaler Abraham Barker, which was capsized. The crew were gallantly rescued by Lieutenant Kennedy and another boat's crew.

July 1 the Corwin arrived at Kotzebue Sound, whence two exploration parties set out—one under the command of Lieutenant Cantwell to proceed up the Kowak River, and the other Assistant Engineer McLenegan, to proceed up the unexplored Noatak River. The Corwin then continued northward, coaled at Cape Sabine August 17, turned her course southward, and arrived at Hotham Inlet August 28, where she found both exploring parties, which had returned after having successfully executed their task. McLenegan, who explored the Noatak River, reports having met Lieutenant Stoney and party at the upper end of Hotham Inlet. Lieutenant Stoney was just about to start for the interior. The Corwin brought mail from Stoney's party.

The vessel left the Arctic Ocean August 28, and arrived at St. Michaels September 4. Here she found Lieutenant H. F. Allen, Sergeant Robertson and F. W. Fickel, of the United States Signal Corps, comprising the party sent out last year by General Miles to explore the Copper River and the [illegible]

[...]isted in the South or North during the war. It is a vital, important question of to-day.

Compare the methods of the Ohio and Virginia campaigns, and see who is waving the bloody shirt. Senator Sherman, Judge Foraker and other Republican speakers go from place to place and meet their fellow-citizens peacefully, without parade or pageant of any kind. Armed men do not accompany them on their tours. Democratic speakers are not warned that they must not go to this or that place, or if they do they will be killed. Democrats are not menaced by bodies of infantry, cavalry and artillery passing through their towns, flying the old war flags, and seeking to arouse the old war prejudices against them. There is freedom of speech, of opinion and of action everywhere, and the issues of the day are discussed as freely and fairly as lawyers argue a case in a court room. The Bourbon campaign in Virginia, on the other hand, is conducted upon two methods, and two only. By one of these appeals are made to the people to vote against the Republicans because the Bourbon State of Virginia is so much grander and more glorious than any of the Northern States! The boast is too silly and puerile to need discussion. Mr. Wise punctured it when he said in one of his recent speeches:

Ohio, with her three million and a half of people, her vast wealth and richly developed resources, her mines and manufactories, her great prosperous cities, the busy hives of industry, her gigantic enterprises, her thousands of miles of railroads, her schools, her high standing of education and intelligence, and refinement, her thronging comforts and luxuries, her palatial homes, her great newspapers and libraries, her vast agricultural resources, her wonderful farming districts like gardens of the Lord, her rapid upward and onward progress, the grand empire that she is—and yet from the Bourbon organ in Lynchburg, which has hardly progressed a foot in a generation, and yet is confident prosperous as things go here, issues a thank God for Virginia, as compared with Ohio. This is not State pride and patriotism. It is blindness and obstinacy; it is, in fact, Bourbonism.

The second method is the Confederate or bloody-shirt method. The Bourbons have organized themselves into red-shirt cavalry companies as escorts for Fitzhugh Lee and other speakers. The most of these cavalrymen are ex-rebels. They go fully armed. They carry with them the rebel flags and banners upon which are inscribed mottoes intended to arouse the old rebel hatred of the negroes and of the North. At a recent Bourbon barbecue held at Bedford the rebel soldiers came in from miles around, bringing their war flags, and headed by Jubal Early, who was simul[...]

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The First Lion Tamer in the Person of the Prophet Daniel.

"Windows Open Toward Jerusalem."—The Relative Attractions of Earthly and Heavenly Homes—Victory the Only Passport to Heaven.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., October 4.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage preached this morning in the Brooklyn Tabernacle on the subject, "Windows Toward Jerusalem." Before the sermon he expounded the parable in Luke concerning the widow's plea before the unjust judge, and showed how God honored prayer. To-day was communion Sabbath, and numbers were added to the church membership, which now reaches considerably beyond 5,000. The opening hymn was:

Nearer, my God, to Thee;
E'en though it be
A cross that raiseth me,
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

The text of the sermon was:

His windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem.—Daniel vi, 10.

Dr. Talmage said: The scoundrelly princes of Persia, urged on by political jealousy of Daniel, have succeeded in getting a law passed that whoever prays to God shall be put under the paw and teeth of the lions, who are lashing themselves in rage and hunger up and down the stone cage; or, putting their lower jaw on the ground, bellowing till the earth trembles. But the leonine threat did not hinder the devotions of Daniel, the cœur de lion. These enemies might as well have a law that the sun should not draw water or that the south wind should not sweep across a garden of magnolias, or that God should be abolished. They could not scare him with the red-hot furnaces, and they can not now scare him with the lions. As soon as Daniel hears of this enactment he leaves his office of Secretary of State, with its upholstery of crimson and gold, and comes down the white marble steps and goes to his own house. He opens his window and pulls the shutters back, and pulls the curtains aside so that he can look toward the sacred city of Jerusalem, and then prays. I suppose the people in the street gathered under and before his window and said: "Just see that man defying the law; he ought to be arrested." And the constabulary of the city rush to the police headquarters and [...]

[...]smilies or Paris to see on the street Victor Hugo and Gambetta. Some chased the chamois among the Alpine precipices. Some plucked the ripe clusters from Italian vineyards. Some lifted their faces under the midnight sun of Norway. It is no dishonor to our land that they remember the place of their nativity. Miscreants would they be if, while they have some of their windows open to take in the free air of America and the sunlight of an atmosphere which no kingly despot has ever breathed, they forget sometimes to open the window toward Jerusalem. No wonder that sometimes when the Swiss is far away from home, at hearing the National air of his own country sung, the malady of home-sickness comes on him so powerfully as to cause his death. You have the example of the heroic Daniel of my text for keeping early memories fresh. Forget not the old folks at home. Write often, and if you have surplus of means and they a deficit, make practical contribution and rejoice that America is bound to all the world by ties of sanguinity as is no other nation. Who can doubt but that it is appointed for the evangelization of all lands? What a stirring, melting, gospelizing theory that all the doors of other nations are open toward us while our windows are open toward them!

But Daniel in the text kept this porthole of his domestic fortress unclosed because Jerusalem was the capital of sacred influences. There smoked the sacrifice. There was the holy of holies. There was the ark of the covenant. There stood the temple. We are all tempted to keep our windows open on the opposite side, toward the world, that we may see and hear and appropriate its advantages. What does the world say? What does the world think? What does the world do? Worshipers of the world instead of worshipers of God. Windows open toward Babylon. Windows open toward Corinth. Windows open toward Athens. Windows open toward Sodom. Windows open toward the flats instead of windows open toward the hills. Sad mistake; for this world as a god is like something I saw the other day in the museum of Strasburg, Germany. The figure of a virgin in wood and iron. The victim in olden time was brought there, and this figure would open its arms to receive him, and once enfolded, the figure closed with a hundred knives and lances upon him, and then afterward let him drop 180 feet sheer down. So the world first embraces its idolaters, then closes upon them with many tortures, and then lets them drop forever down. The highest honor the world could confer was to make a man Roman Emperor, but out of sixty-three Emperors it al[...]

[...]he often thought, though he fell home when a very young man, perhaps father and mother and brothers and sisters still living, and was homesick to see them, and they belonged to the high circles of royalty, Daniel himself having royal blood in his veins, so we have in the New Jerusalem a great many kindred, and we are sometimes homesick to see them, and they are all Princes and Princesses, in them the blood imperial, and we do well to keep our windows open toward their eternal residence. It is a joy for us to believe that while we are interested in them they are interested in us. Much thought of Heaven makes one heavenly. The airs that blow through that open window are charged with life and sweep up to us aromas from gardens that never wither under skies that never cloud in a springtide that never terminates. Compared with it all other things are dead failures. Homer's Heaven was an elysium, which he describes as a plain at the end of the earth, or beneath, with no snow or rainfall, and the sun never goes down, and Rhadamanthus, the justest of men, rules. Hesiod's Heaven is what he calls the islands of the blest, in the midst of the ocean, three times a year blooming with the most exquisite flowers, and the air is tinted with purple, while games and music and horse-races occupy the time. The Scandinavian's Heaven was the hall of Walhalla, where the god Odin gave unending wine-suppers to earthly heroes and heroines. The Mohammedan's Heaven passes its disciples in over the bridge Al Sirat, which is finer than a hair and sharper than a sword, and then they are let loose into a riot of everlasting sensuality.

The American aborigines look forward to a heaven of illimitable hunting-ground, partridge and deer and wild duck more than plentiful, and the hounds never off the scent, and the guns never missing fire. But the geographer has followed the earth around, and found no Homer's Elysium. Voyagers have traversed the deep in all directions, and found no Hesiod's islands of the blest. The Mohammedan's celestial debauchery and the Indian's eternal hunting-ground for vast multitudes have no charm. But here rolls in the Bible heaven. No more sea; that is, no wide separation. No more tears; that is, no heartbreak. No more pain, that is, dismissal of lancet and bitter draught and miasma and banishment of neuralgia and catalepsies and consumptions. All colors in the wall except gloomy black. All the music in the major key because celebrative and jubilant. River crystalline, gate crystalline and skies crystalline because everything is clear and without doubt. White robes, and that means sinlessness. Vials full of [...]

A Plucky Young Woman.

[Columbia (S. C.) Special.]

The jail at Camden has for a long time been considered insecure, and for this reason the prisoners have recently been kept in their cells and not allowed the privilege of the corridor. The jailer is a cripple and has been confined to his bed for several months. During this time his duties have been attended to by his daughter, Miss Gaskins, and she has proved herself worthy of the trust reposed in her. On Friday evening a new lot of prisoners were received at the jail, and, as the prison was already crowded, nine of them were locked up in an old cell which had not been used for some time. In the night one of the prisoners managed to get out of the cell into the corridor, and by some means procured a piece of iron, with which he broke the lock and released the other eight. They immediately began prying off the bars from one of the windows, and in a few minutes all of them would have been free. At this juncture, however, Miss Gaskins heard the noise. The plucky little woman at once picked up a bar of iron, unlocked the outer door, and rushed into the corridor, where the prisoners were working at the window. She drove every one of them back into their cell, in short order, and kept guard at the door until the Sheriff arrived and took charge of the jail and managed the prisoners, several of whom are noted negro desperadoes, and one a convicted murderer under sentence of death.

A Sad End.

[New Haven Palladium.]

William J. Young, a harness-maker about thirty-five years of age, who during the past summer has worked in the villages of New Milford and New Preston, was found dead at the former place yesterday. The habitual use of intoxicating liquor had ruined a brilliant intellect and undoubtedly caused his death. The deceased was a man of rare natural ability and had a wonderful memory. His knowledge of Shakespeare was phenomenal, and he was able to recite from memory all the most notable passages in the works of the great author. His literary attainments were of the bright and versatile character that has rendered many a less capable person famous. His knowledge of history, both ancient and modern, acquired by constant reading and study, was remarkably thorough. He had read most of the literary productions of all the noted authors, and his ability to quote from them in conversation rendered him a most interesting conversationalist.

TWO NOTED MINSTRELS.

Who Have Won Fortunes and What They Say About Stage Life.

From Stage Whispers.

"Billy" Emerson has recently made a phenomenal success in Australia, and is rich.

Emerson was born at Belfast in 1846. He began his career with Joe Sweeney's minstrels in Washington in 1857. Later on he jumped into prominence in connection with Newcomb's minstrels with whom he visited Germany. He visited Australia in 1874 and on his return to America joined Haverly's minstrels in San Francisco at $250 a week and expenses. With this troupe he played before her majesty, the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and royalty generally. After this trip he leased the Standard theater, San Francisco, where for three years he did the largest business ever known to minstrelsy. In April last he went to Australia again, where he has "beaten the record."

"Billy" is a very handsome fellow, an excellent singer, dances gracefully, and is a true humorist.

"Yes, sir, I have traveled all over the world, have met all sorts of people, come in contact with all sorts of customs, and had all sorts of experiences. One must have a constitution like a locomotive to stand it.

"Yes, I know I seem to bear it like a major and I do, but I tell you candidly that with the perpetual change of diet, water and climate, if I had not maintained my vigor with regular use of Warner's Safe Cure I should have gone under long ago."

George H. Primrose, whose name is known in every amusement circle in America, is even more emphatic, if possible, than "Billy" Emerson, in commendation of the same article to sporting and traveling men generally, among whom it is a great favorite.

Emerson has grown rich on the boards and so has Primrose, because they have not squandered the public's "favors."

"THE canny Scot" ought to go into the fruit-canning business.—Washington Hatchet.

$500 Not Called For.

It seems strange that it is necessary to persuade men that you can cure their diseases by offering a premium to the man who fails to receive benefit. And yet Dr. Sage undoubtedly cured thousands of cases of obstinate catarrh with his "Catarrh Remedy," who would never have applied to him, if it had not been for his offer of the above sum for an incurable case. Who is the next bidder for cure or cash?

"CAN you tell me what a smile is, little maiden?" "Yes, sir; it's the whisper of a laugh."—Golden Days.

FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.
The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

THE Yuma Indians recently held a grand council and resolved to adopt pantaloons as an article of dress.

IT is asserted that Kansas has never had a breach-of-promise suit since the State was admitted to the Union.

IT is said that Washington Territory is preparing to make application for admission into the Union as a State.

GEORGE BANCROFT, the historian, celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday at his home in Newport, R. I., a few days since.

EIGHT MILLION acres of Southern Florida have never been surveyed and are wholly given over to mosquitoes and alligators.

AN eminent council of New York doctors have decided that "cousins may marry" without violating wise physical laws.

FOUR Irish women were naturalized in the United States District Court at Boston a few days ago—which is a wholly new departure.

THE Governor of Georgia has signed the State Local Option bill, thus securing practical prohibition to many of the cities and towns of the State.

AMONG the latest productions of San Diego County, Cal., is a sweet potato weighing 27½ pounds and a squash which tips the scales at 105½ pounds.

APPLES are so plenty and so cheap in Connecticut that farmers are feeding them to cows, horses and pigs, and in portions of New Hampshire the fruit only brings two cents a bushel.

A TEXAS paper described a recently-discovered meteor as "about the size of a water can," and the next week the editor received four hundred letters asking how large a water can was.

BENJAMIN SMITH, of Indiana, went out one night to lock the barn, and the Detroit Free Press says it was just fourteen years before his wife saw him again. She says she didn't expect him any sooner.

SARAH BERNHARDT, after selling her jewels, her furniture and her villa, and giving up a large share of her salary regularly, still finds herself $150,000 in debt. She hopes to clear $250,000 on her coming American tour.

THE Georgia washerwoman who astonished the community by announcing that she had named her twins Mary Magdalene and Virgin Mary has a good second in the Iowa woman who has called hers Gasoline and Kerosene.

SINCE California began to import ostriches, the Government of the Cape of Good Hope has imposed an export duty of five hundred dollars a head on ostriches, in order to keep the birds and the ostrich-feather business at home.

A PICKLE famine is threatened the coming winter. The present supply at the East is set down at 80,000,000—one-half only of what is needed for the Eastern trade. The Western crops have suffered, and heavy advances in prices are looked for.

THE New York State Board for the Equalization of Taxes met in Albany a few days ago and made its return for all the counties in the State. The total equalized value of landed property in the State is $762,348,2[illegible]; of real estate and personal property, $3,094,891,457. The equalized valuation last year was $3,014,591,872.

THE social purity movement in London founded on the revelations made by the Pall Mall Gazette is steadily increasing in strength, and is now headed by the Methodist Church. Meetings are being held to organize a general system of boycotting tradesmen and commercial houses managed by men of reputed immorality.

THE trees on 10,2[illegible] acres of land were consumed by fire during the last census period. The time is coming, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, when a forest of great trees will be a richer treasure than any gold mine. Parties who start fires in a forest should be held to an account for damages under the law, just the same as if they should fire a dwelling or burn a stacked crop.

STORIES of dogs giving evidence in court are innumerable; but in Paris a man has just established his right to a fowl which he was charged with stealing by making it perform before the police certain tricks he had taught it. He made it crow, perch on his shoulder, and do many other wonderful things, which quite overwhelmed the direct evidence of his having picked up the fowl in the street.

THE Papal See has approved the edicts of the plenary council held at Baltimore recently, and grants to the Catholic Church of the United States practical independence in many respects. It has enlarged the scope of clerical and lay education, dispensed with benefices and parochial livings, and grants to the hierarchy here the practical control of all matters, secular and spiritual, affecting the church.

IN attempting to put back upon British soil Chinamen who had come into the United States in violation of the restriction act, a customs officer on the Northwestern frontier has been confronted with a Canadian statute which provides that a fee of fifty dollars per capita shall be paid for Chinese readmitted into the Dominion. A novel situation has resulted, which the State Department will have to wrestle with.

SURGEON-GENERAL HAMILTON stated on the 12th that the danger of a cholera epidemic in the United States had passed for the present.

FOUR ranchmen near Dallas, Tex., were killed by Apache Indians a few days ago and their stock driven off.

THE United States revenue cutter Corwin arrived at San Francisco on the 12th from Alaska with 102 wrecked seamen aboard. She reported that the New Bedford (Mass.) whaler Napoleon was sunk in the Arctic Ocean, and that twenty-two of her crew, including the first and third mates, were drowned. Other vessels were also wrecked and some lives were lost.

SMASHING CARS AND HEADS.

Serious Riots Engaged in by the Striking Car-Drivers in St. Louis—Many Cars Overturned in the Streets—A Striker Shot Dead by a Policeman, and a Number of Others Badly Wounded.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Oct. 10.—Riot and bloodshed was the order of yesterday in the street-car strike during both the morning and the afternoon. On several of the lines, in full sight of the police, the strikers stopped the cars and turned them over. This occurred at noon on Cass avenue, and seven cars were actually torn to pieces on Chotean avenue. The roof and sides were torn from three cars. The strikers were charged whenever they made an attempt to stop the cars, and in the riots which ensued several persons were injured. The first life taken was that of John Haney, one of the striking drivers of the Green line. Police Officer Hannon, who did the shooting, says:

"Officer Griffith and myself were riding on a Blue line car, in accordance with instructions, and were passing up Stoddard avenue about fifty feet south of Hickory street when a crowd of about fifty people, ranged on both sides of the road, suddenly closed in on the car. They at once began cutting the harness, and Griffith and I called upon them to desist. They paid no attention to what we said, but attacked us with clubs and rocks. I was struck on the arm with a rock and quite badly hurt. We fought the crowd with our sticks, but they were too much for us, and one of the men came behind Griffith and knocked him down. He held him face downward and was beating him when I fired and killed him. Just before the man attacked him Griffith had fired a shot at a retreating man. I fired only the one shot. When the crowd saw that the man was killed it had the effect of quelling them for a short time."

Police Officers Hannon and Griffith, who claimed that the shooting of Haney was done in self-defense, are not borne out in their statement by eye witnesses, who say that Haney was running away, with an officer in pursuit. The latter caught Haney, threw him down, and was beating him, when Officer Hannon came up and shot Haney, killing him at once.

Officer Hannon was arrested and imprisoned. When Officer Griffith reached the Four Courts he displayed every evidence of having been in a tight place. His uniform was covered with dust, and there were marks about his clothes which very clearly had been left there by bricks or other missiles. His story fully corroborates that of Officer Hannon. Several of the strikers were arrested at the scene of the killing. Among them was a man named Ed Haney, a brother of the deceased.

At noon a serious demonstration was made by the strikers against cars passing along the Twelfth street bridge. About fifty of the strikers were scattered at the north end of the bridge, and when a Gravois line car approached they suddenly, and apparently in obedience to a preconcerted signal, concentrated around the car and made an attack upon it. There were very few passengers on board, and these very hastily left the car. The driver succeeded in making his escape, but the conductor was less fortunate. He rushed for the front platform, but was caught there by the strikers, who pummeled him unmercifully, and then tore him from the car. After having kicked him unconscious and liberated the car horses, the gang, by this time largely augmented, made a rush south along the bridge, and at a point about seventy-five yards south of the Union depot came up with a white car and attacked it. The conductor and driver had fled, and the affrighted passengers were just making their escape, when the attacking party seized the horses, cut the traces, and by beating the animals with the car hook sent them flying along the bridge. They then massed themselves upon the west side of the car and with a united effort turned it over upon the eastern track.

Another white car coming north was next attacked. The conductor and driver managed to escape, a fact which seemed to infuriate the rioters, who made such haste in their endeavor to turn the car over that they were actually tipping it up while the passengers were still trying to escape from it. Having also turned over a yellow and a blue car, the rioters settled down to await the arrival of others. At this moment the police appeared and scattered them.

Shortly before noon trouble broke out almost simultaneously on the People's line and on the Union Depot line. A gang of men whom officers declared to be street-car employes started in to wreck the People's line at Fourth and Chotean avenue. As near as could be estimated before the crowd of spectators assembled there were fully thirty or forty men in the wrecking force. The first assault was made on car No. 17, which was running down town with a load of passengers. The men called to the passengers to get out. Several jumped on the front platform, and, striking the driver two or three times, threw him off the car, slipped the pin out and started the horses on a full run. The car was then turned across the two tracks, completely blocking the way.

At about 1:30 o'clock a mob gathered on O'Fallon street near Eleventh and stopped the first car of the Union line that came west. Ordering the driver and conductor off, which was promptly obeyed, the passengers were given barely time to get off when the car was upset by the mob. The next six cars that came shared the same fate. In all cases the boxes of the bobtails which were thrown from the track were broken upon and the money carried away. Several of the cars which were thrown from the track were manned by policemen. A detail of policemen patrolled the streets in the neighborhood soon after the trouble occurred, and in many cases they were assaulted with stones thrown by the crowd which was doing the wrecking.

At 2:30 a mob of 500 men appeared at the corner of Cass avenue and Twelfth street, and as the Cass avenue cars came along each in turn was dumped into the gutter. Seven cars were torn to pieces and their windows and doors broken in before the police appeared and scattered the gathering.

At dark all of the street-car companies, except the Franklin avenue and Olive street lines, ran their cars into the stables. The above two lines have acceded to the demands of the strikers.

The leading merchants held a meeting at the Mercantile club-room last evening. They concluded, after a lengthy discussion, to meet the street-car managers to-day and ask them to meet the strikers for the purpose of effecting some sort of a compromise. All of the merchants at the meeting stated that the strike was doing much damage to their business, and to-day they will hear both sides of the case and appeal to the public to sustain them in whatever decision they make in the premises.

—Running across the churchyard of a little town in Androscoggin, Me., are the ruins of a fence, the relics of a fierce theological controversy which was waged nearly half a century ago. It gave rise to feuds between old friends and neighbors, and stirred up strife in families. The bitterness invaded not only the home, the shop, the lawyer's office, the church and the parsonage, but it finally attacked the cemetery, and a fence was built across it to separate the graves of one denomination from those of the members of the other sects.—Boston Journal.

END OF A NOBLE CAREER.

Death in New York City of the Distinguished Prelate, Cardinal McCloskey—The End Peaceful and Quiet—Brief Biographical Sketch.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Cardinal McCloskey died at 12:50 o'clock this morning, peacefully and surrounded by relatives and clergymen of his sect. Soon after four o'clock yesterday afternoon the Cardinal sank into unconsciousness, and so continued through the evening. The gravest apprehensions were based on this fact, and Mgr. Farley, Father Donbresse and Mrs. John Kelly—who was at her house—were hurriedly summoned to the Cardinal's house and bedside. At ten o'clock those about the bedside of the sick man were of the firm belief that he never again would regain consciousness. The Cardinal's nephew had been sent for, he being in Philadelphia. For some hours prior to his loss of consciousness the Cardinal had taken no nourishment, and those who watched felt that all that now was left was the inevitable and speedy exhaustion of the unsupported vital forces. Rev. Father Hussey came hurriedly soon after ten o'clock and joined the group of watching friends. It was yet thought that dissolution might be from ten to twelve hours distant, but this was not to be. About midnight lights began flashing from various rooms in the Cardinal's house, and to the groups waiting outside there came the consciousness that the unusual activity inside was indicative of the approach of closing scenes. At 12:30 a nervous twitching of the muscles of the dying man's face was observed, and the household drew nearer. The doctor bent by the bedside and constantly felt the rapidly flickering pulse. The reverend monsignors prayed fervently and repeated invocations for the dying. Half-past twelve, and the scene was one simply of waiting. On one side of the bed were the Cardinal's nieces, Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Cleary, and on the other side were Miss McCloskey and Miss Muller, the latter another niece. Behind them and standing almost in a circle were Mgrs. Farley, Preston and Quinn, Archbishop Corrigan, Dr. McDonald, Father Donbresse and the assistant priests attached to the Cathedral, who recited the prayers for the dying. Dr. Keyes, at the head of the bed, anxiously watched the ebbing life of his patient, who, though unconscious, still held in his hand a crucifix, the emblem of his faith. At 12:50 the end came, and so peacefully and painlessly that those who watched scarcely new that the great change had come, until Dr. Keyes signified that all was over and that the Cardinal was dead. Then the butler, Walsh, ushered forth to a call the venerable Rev. Donbresse. The servant's eyes were wet, and Dr. Keyes, who supported the reverend father on one side, said to the waiting crowd outside: "The Cardinal is dead." Mgr. Preston remained with the relatives and offered prayers for the repose of the prelate's soul. The other dignitaries and priests retired after the death.

John McCloskey was born in Brooklyn March 10, 1810. He studied theology in a seminary at Emmettsburg, Md., and graduated from Mount St. Mary's College. He received the first orders January 9, 1834, and then went to Rome, where he studied. After spending a year in France he returned to this country and was appointed assistant pastor of St. Joseph's Church in this city, and six months after became rector. Bishop Hughes, in 1841, nominated him first President of St. John's College, at Fordham, but in 1842 he resumed the rectorship of St. Joseph's Church. November 21, 1843, he was appointed, at the suggestion of Bishop Hughes, his coadjutor, and was consecrated with the title of Bishop of Axiere March 10, 1844. Bishop McCloskey was nominated first Bishop of Albany May 21, in the division of the diocese of New York, which took place in 1847. After the death of Archbishop Hughes, he was appointed to the See of New York May 6, 1864. He gave $10,000 from his private purse toward the building of the Fifth Avenue Cathedral. He was created Cardinal Priest March 15, 1875. The jurisdiction over which Cardinal McCloskey presided comprises the city and county of New York, and the counties south of the forty-second degree north latitude, excepting those on Long Island.

Cardinal McCloskey was the first Cardinal of America, and upon his death he does not of necessity have a successor. The growth of the Catholic Church in this country has been so satisfactory, however, that there is no doubt felt about the continuance of the Cardinal's cap to New York. But it is thought that even greater favor will be shown the Catholics in this country than that, and that before the cap is again given to New York either Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, or Archbishop Williams, of Boston, will be made a Cardinal. It is thought most likely that the cap will be given to Archbishop Gibbons. The cap will probably then be given to Archbishop Corrigan, and there will be two Cardinals in America.

INDIAN EDUCATION.

Hon. John H. Oberly Gives His Views of the Present System and the Policy of the Future.

LAKE MOHONK, N. Y., Oct. 10.—John H. Oberly, Superintendent of Indian Schools, under Secretary Lamar, delivered an impromptu address yesterday before the Indian Civilization Conference here. It related principally to the management of Indian educational affairs under the present Administration. He said that when he entered upon his duties he found no system prevailed, and many of the teachers were not suitable persons. He declared his intention of gradually weeding out the incompetent ones and filling their places with good Democrats. He condemned the present system of teaching. The list of text-books to be found in Indian schools is a quarter of a mile long, and embraces the works of every Republican school-book publisher in the country. He did not think much of this pretended text-book education. He would teach the Indian not only the simple rudiments, but what might be called politics—the structure of the Government; his rights of property and person; the wrong system of his fathers, and how to work and earn a living. He did not think much of teaching boys trades which they could not utilize. After educating the boys he suggested teaching them cattle-raising, allowing them to contract with white men to take herds on their reservations and return them when called for, all the work on the reservations to be done by Indians. He also favored assisting them to raise cattle for themselves. Mr. Oberly said in conclusion: "I hope to make some radical changes, for I believe that only through the school-house can the Indian be led into the light of civilization." The conference adopted a series of resolutions as a platform.

Great Loss of Life and Property.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 10.—Continued rains make railroad traffic impossible. Passengers and mails on the Central Railway are still delayed. The bridge at Lerdo has been carried away, and the passengers and mails are being transferred in boats. There can be no permanent improvement till it stops raining in the interior. The rains in this city have several times within the week flooded the streets, making travel, except in cabs, impossible. The lowlands about the city and near Guadaloupe are flooded. The loss to the farmers in the flooded districts in the interior will be heavy. A number of lives have been lost in the rural villages by the bursting of reservoirs.

The Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—The October term of the Supreme Court of the United States begins on next Monday. Its docket contains 1,040 cases and others are coming in daily. The docket will probably number 1,500 cases before the end of the term. The court, by reason of its energetic work during the last four or five years, has ceased falling farther behind. Four hundred and sixty cases were disposed of last year, at which rate, if continued, the last case on the present docket will be adjudicated within three years. The Judges are all in good health, and there will probably be a full bench at the opening.

MANGLED BY A MONSTER.

The Elephant Empress Tramples a Circus Employe Beneath Her Feet and Disembowels Him with Her Tusks—The Unfortunate Man Her Third Victim.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct 12.—The big African elephant Empress, owned by John O'Brien, the circus man, was taken late on Saturday night to Forepaugh's winter quarters. The beast was in charge of Harry Coaley, the only man who can manage Empress, and John Flood. The big elephant is very vicious. The midnight journey was made without accident, and by one o'clock the elephant was placed in a stall and securely shackled. Coaley remained up all night with his charge, and at ten o'clock fed and watered it.

Robert R. White, who has charge of the winter quarters, came in during the morning to see the elephant. He was quite proud of his ability to manage elephants. About a quarter of an hour later White volunteered to show Allen and another man how he could manage the elephant, and proposed to bring it out and water it. They advised him not to attempt it, but he persisted. Going into the stall, he unlinked the shackles on Empress, who followed him to the water trough and took a drink. Empress had no sooner finished than she wheeled suddenly about without making a sound and struck White a terrible blow with her trunk, knocking him twenty feet away against a brick wall. She followed up this work quickly by disemboweling the helpless man with her tusks, and raising one ponderous fore foot she set it down upon him, crushing his breast-bone and shoulder-blade.

Allen and friend fled at the first blow and gave the alarm. A crowd immediately collected at the entrance of the house, but no one dare enter. Empress stood over her victim swinging her trunk viciously. Dan Taylor arrived in a few minutes, and, taking in the situation at a glance, seized an elephant spear and prepared to go to White's rescue. "Don't go in," yelled the crowd, "she'll kill you." "I can't stand by and see that man lying there," replied Taylor, resolutely. He advanced, spear in hand, and in a low, cool tone commanded Empress to go back. Slowly and sullenly she backed away, and, as she retired, Taylor advanced until he had reached White's body. There he stopped, and John Coyle ran forward, picked up the injured man, and carried him out.

While awaiting the arrival of an ambulance Dan Taylor said to White: "Bob, why did you go in there?" "Just to be smart," replied White, who was still perfectly conscious. "But I'm all broke up now, Dan." White died while being taken to the hospital.

It is not known what disposition will be made of Empress, but it is not supposed that she will be killed, as she is very valuable, being regarded as the finest performing elephant in this country. While on exhibition she is docile, and children are permitted to pet her. Empress has now killed her third man, and her record includes the injuring at least of a score of men.

BASE-BALL.

How the Clubs of the Leading Organizations Stand at the Close of the Season.

Last Saturday witnessed the close of the base-ball season, the last of the scheduled games of the National League and American Association having been played on that date. The following shows the place occupied by each club of the first-named organization at the close:

Clubs.	Won.	Lost.
Chicago	87	25
New York	85	27
Philadelphia	56	55
Providence	53	57
Boston	47	65
Detroit	40	68
Buffalo	38	74
St. Louis	36	72

American Association clubs stand as follows:

Clubs.	Won.	Lost.
St. Louis	79	32
Cincinnati	64	48
Pittsburgh	56	55
Athletic	51	57
Louisville	54	57
Brooklyn	52	59

TIDAL WAVE AT SAVANNAH.

Georgia Rice Crops Ruined by High Water—Heavy Rains and Washouts.

SAVANNAH, GA., Oct. 12.—A strong north-east gale which has been blowing all day caused a tidal wave in the Savannah River yesterday noon and another at ten p. m. The rice plantations are all submerged, the banks are badly broken, and the crop is all under water. The loss is estimated at from sixty to seventy-five per cent. Hutchinson Island, opposite Savannah, is inundated and all of the residents came over to the city at night. The rice crop along the Ogeechee and Satilla rivers is also damaged, and many fields will be a total loss. The heavy rain has flooded the country south of here, and the track of the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway is washed out in several places. A freight train ran into a washout near Folkeston and the engineer and fireman were seriously injured. The Jacksonville & Savannah express is also off the track at Callahan.

The Crops.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—The Department of Agriculture reports that the yield of wheat per acre for the area harvested is ten and a half bushels, and only nine on the area sown, which was nearly 40,000,000 acres. The area harvested will not exceed 34,000,000 acres. The indications point to a yield of twenty-six and a half bushels of corn per acre, which would give a yield of 1,900,000,000 bushels. The oats crop exceeds 500,000,000 bushels. The condition of cotton has dropped from eighty-seven to seventy-eight per cent. The rye average is 10.4 bushels, nearly two bushels short of the yield of 1884. The average yield of the barley will be about twenty-two bushels per acre. The condition of potatoes has seriously declined on account of the prevalence of rot in New York, Michigan and elsewhere. The decline from the 1st of September was eleven points.

Cleveland Refuses Royal Gifts.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—A representative of the King of the Samoan Islands called at the White House Friday to deliver a number of presents sent by his Majesty to President Cleveland. The articles consisted of a fuzzy white rug made from the bark of the white mulberry tree, a punch bowl made of native woods, and a highly polished drinking cup made from an unusually large Samoan cocoanut. The emissary did not succeed in seeing the President, but was told that the President did not dare to accept them. He took his departure greatly disappointed.

The Special Delivery—Postmasters Speak Well of the System.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—From the reports received thus far, it appears that nearly all postmasters speak well of the feature of the special delivery system, and the business is increasing. The local matter equals the outside matter in volume. The reports show that the letters generally have been delivered with surprising promptness. Reading, Pa., reports the average time required for delivery to be nine minutes, while letters have been received at the department building in this city in seven minutes from the time they were dropped in the post-office.

BY A CHILD'S HAND.

The Eleven-Year-Old Daughter of General Newton Touches the Electric Button Which Causes the Explosion of Nearly 300,000 Pounds of Dynamite Imbedded in Flood Rock—The Affair a Great Success.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—The 280,000 pounds of dynamite under Flood Rock, Hell Gate, exploded at 11:13 a. m. Saturday. The shock was plainly felt at the lower end of Manhattan Island.

All points on the shore from which Flood Rock could be seen were densely packed with people. The police were kept busy in keeping the crowd outside of the danger line. Ropes had been stretched across the river above and below the scene of explosion, and launches from the navy yard patroled the river to see that no vessels attempted to pass through.

At precisely 11:13 o'clock the earth trembled, and the bosom of the river was pierced with a mighty upheaval of rocks and timbers. Up, up went the glittering masses of water, until it seemed as if they would never stop. At a height of two hundred feet the uplifted waters paused and fell back again to the river. At this moment, when the air for hundreds of feet in each direction was filled with the white masses of sparkling water, the spectacle was grand beyond expression. Mary Newton, the eleven-year-old daughter of General Newton, who, as Chief Engineer, has conducted the operations at Hell Gate since the start, touched the button that set free the electric current that exploded the submarine mines and shattered the mountain of rock, lifting it out of the bosom of the sea and crushing it into a million of fragments. It was little Mary Newton who, when a mere baby, touched off the first Hell Gate explosion a few feet from the point where she stood yesterday. The shock of the collapse was felt slightly on the Astoria shore, and the noise resembled far-distant subterranean thunder. Where Flood Rock had lifted its strong back a mass of broken rock was seen; on top of it all the big derrick that had been left to its fate tumbled over on its side and broke. A huge rack that had been left at the north end of the island still stood in its place tilted over a little, as it had settled when let down with the angry waters from its aerial flight. Immediately after the explosion a fire broke out in the wreck and burned lustily amid the seething waters. Four instantaneous photographs were taken by officers of the corps of engineers from the firing point of Astoria.

The shock was felt to a slight extent in the city. It was distinctly felt in the City Hall building, the structure trembling for the space of five seconds. At the County Court House the shock was also distinctly felt. In the upper part of the buildings the floors shook and the windows trembled when the explosion occurred.

In Astoria the glassware fell from the store shelves and houses were rocked. No serious damage was done, though the ceilings of some buildings were cracked. Windows in Princeton, N. J., were rattled, and successful observations of the vibrations were made there and at Patchogue, Bay Shore, Babylon, and Pearsalls with seismometers.

Much of the rock still extends above water, and people clambered over it after the explosion without wetting their feet. "Little Niggerhead" has disappeared and a new rock has risen to take its place. "Big Niggerhead" seems to be unaffected. The engineers are satisfied with the result of the explosion, and declare that it has accomplished all that was expected of it.

General Newton's next work will be the levelling off, by surface blasting of Frying Pan Reef, which now lies a depth of only eighteen feet of water above it at low tide, and in working a little off Negro Point at the southern extremity of Ward's Island. When this is done there will be a straight channel through.

The work upon Flood Rock, now consummated, was begun in 1875. Nine acres of solid rock were tunneled. The greatest depth attained was sixty-four feet by the main shaft, and the average gallery floor was about fifty feet deep. The length of the galleries and tunnels was nearly four miles, and the shell of rock separating them from the body of water overhead varied from ten to twenty-four feet. Four hundred and sixty-seven rock columns, each about 15 feet square, supported this roof. In these pillars and the roof 13,286 holes, 3 inches in diameter, were drilled to an average depth of 9 feet. As compared with the work upon Hallet's reef, it is stated that there the total length of the galleries was 7,426 feet; at Flood Rock the total length was 21,670. In the former there were 172 piers, each 10 feet square, in the latter 476, each 15 feet square. There 51,000 cubic yards of rock had to be removed; here 350,000 cubic yards were taken away. In Hallet's Reef 3,673 holes were drilled, in Flood Rock there were 13,286, and while only 47,781 pounds of dynamite were used in 1876, six times that amount was exploded under the waters of Hell Gate.

The holes in the pillars were charged with "rackarock" and dynamite (No. 1) cartridges in the proportion of about eight volumes of the former to one volume of the latter. The total weight of these cartridges was about 280,000 pounds, or, in round figures, over one hundred and forty tons. "Rackarock" is a mixture of chlorate of potash with dinitro benzole, looks like moist, light brown sugar, and has ninety-five per cent. of the strength of No. 1 dynamite.

The removal of Flood Rock in Hell Gate Channel is the crowning act in the work of thirty-five years. The reef obstructed the navigation of ships wishing to enter New York Harbor from the east. The initial step toward removing the rocks was begun in 1848. In 1780 the steamer Hussar, bearing British gold, struck Flood Rock and sunk. By removal of Flood Rock and the reduction of Hallet's Point reef to a depth of twenty-six feet at mean low water, the channel is now estimated to be from 1,200 to 1,500 feet wide, and is navigable for ships and ocean vessels of the largest class, many of which will avail themselves of the saving of forty miles which the Sound route offers over that by New York bay. With the aid of the immense electric light on Hallet's Point, which throws its powerful rays over the whole of Hell Gate channel, the passage through this once dangerous waterway will be practically safe day and night. The cost of the work on Flood Rock closely approximates $1,000,000. From 1869 to 1879, the amount expended was $350,000 and since the latter date Congress appropriated over $750,000. Over 500,000 feet of wire were used in connecting the blasts and the batteries.

—Mail-carrying in Arizona is attended with some danger. Lately the horse of a carrier failed him while he was thirty miles from his destination, Agua Caliente, but he kept on his way on foot. After he had gone fifteen miles he became exhausted, and was found on the road in a dying condition, his mail-bags having been dragged off by wild animals and torn to pieces.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

—One hundred years ago there were six thousand inhabitants in St. Mary's City, Md. To-day the town contains two buildings, one of which is an Episcopal church and the other is a female academy. Nearly all the remains of the lost city are vanished, but the mulberry tree under which Lord Baltimore offered prayer on his arrival two hundred and fifty-one years ago still stands.—Baltimore Sun.

—The earliest inquest in Saco and Biddeford of which there is any record was held on the body of Mary Halle. According to the verdict it seems "that she was accessory to her own death with much eating and drinking, we not having any witnesses that she was forced thereunto."—Biddeford (Me.) Times.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA,—OUR OWN IMPORTATION
Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

SENATOR HOAR'S REMARKS.

An Excellent Expression of Opinion on Live Political Issues.

Senator G. F. Hoar, on taking the Chair of the recent Massachusetts State Convention spoke at some length on current political questions. He denied that the Republican party continues or is disposed to continue to "wave the bloody shirt" of the late war; but, as regards the South, he said the Republican party of the Nation, while in favor of restoring the spirit of peace and harmony between the two sections, also insists upon the right of all legal citizens to free discussion, unobstructed suffrage, and an honest counting of their votes. He said:

[illegible]

...him to say to the Secretary. Mr. Bayard received this message with anger. He said: "I don't know about any private understanding you may have with the President. This is the first I have heard of it. If you go back to him and get that message in writing I will of course make out your commission, but I don't propose to act upon any alleged private understanding that you say you have with the President without some very direct proof of it."

At this insulting speech the visitor got up and left the room. He was so indignant that he went over to the White House and left a "P. P. C." card for the President, and without another word of explanation he went back to New York. He has since said that Mr. Bayard's manner cured him of all ambition of desiring a place in the diplomatic service under such a man, and that was the reason why he did not go back to the President. The story of his treatment was afterwards related to his friend who secured him the promise of the place. Neither of them have been seen in Washington since.—Washington Cor. Chicago Sun.

CLEVELAND'S PLEDGES.

The Present Administration Going Beyond Any of Its Predecessors in Official Demorals.

Has President Cleveland fulfilled his pledges of Civil-Service reform? Has his practice conformed to his professions? Has he really inaugurated any new policy or lifted the public service above the partisan plane?

The President's pledges and declarations on this subject were heartily welcomed by the country. Among the mass of intelligent and fair-minded citizens there was an earnest desire that he should actually accomplish what he ostentatiously promised. If hide-bound partisans objected, the great body of the people looked on with encourage-...

The Increase of Insanity.

Boston supports 290 insane, says Mr. T. B. Sanborn, not 75 of whom will recover! This is frightful! Insanity has increased 40 per cent. in a decade and most of the cases are incurable. Whatever the individual cause may be, the fact remains that Uric Acid blood sets the brain on fire, destroys its tissues, and then causes a fatal form of fatal lunacy.

Nothing is so pitiable as a mind diseased. Most brain troubles begin in the stomach! then if the blood is filled with uric acid, caused by failure of kidney action, and the consequent destruction of the blood life—albumen—you have the fuel and the flame and a brain in full blaze as when one raves, or in slow combustion, as in milder forms of insanity. Rev. E. D. Hopkins, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., a few years ago was confined in an asylum. He took a terrible cold while aiding in putting out a fire in a neighbor's burning house, and for twenty-five years that cold was slowly filling his blood with uric acid and finally the deadly work was done. The case looked hopeless but he happily used Warner's safe cure and recovered. That was three years ago and having ridden his blood of all surplus uric acid, he has remained well until this day.

It is indeed a terrible thing to lose one's mind, but it is a more terrible thing to suffer such a condition when it can be so easily prevented.

INQUIRER asks: What must I do to make my hands soft? Do nothing.—Boston Courier.

Are You Going to New Orleans or Florida?

If so, you can go via the MONON ROUTE via Louisville or Cincinnati, and see the Mammoth Cave, Nashville, Blount Springs, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile and the Gulf coast for the same money that will take you through the dreary, uninhabited Mississippi swamps, you can not select a line to the South enjoying half the advantages that are possessed by the MONON ROUTE and its Southern connections.

No one should think of going South without visiting the Mammoth Cave the great natural wonder of this continent. From Mobile to New Orleans (141 miles) the ride along the Gulf coast is alone worth the entire cost of the whole trip. In full sight of the Gulf all the way, past Ocean Springs, Mississippi City, Pass Christian, Bay St. Louis and Beauvoir, the home of Jeff Davis.

Life in the Paris Sewers

is possible, for a short time, to the robust, but the majority of refined persons would prefer immediate death to existence in their reeking atmosphere. How much more revolting to be in one's self a living sewer. But this is actually the case with those in whom the inactivity of the liver drives the refuse matter of the body to escape through the lungs, breath, the pores, kidneys and bladder. It is astonishing that life remains in such a dwelling. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" restores normal purity to the system and renews the whole being.

THE Woman Question—"Now isn't this a pretty time of night for you to get home?"—National Weekly.

"Her face so fair, as flesh it seemed not,
But heavenly portrait of bright angel's hue,
Clear as the sky, without a blame or blot,
Through goodly mixture of complexions due,
And in her cheeks the vermeil red did show."

This is the poet's description of a woman whose physical system was in a perfectly sound and healthy state, with every function acting properly, and is the enviable condition of its fair patrons produced by Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Any druggist.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

Five Men Killed and a Large Number Wounded by a Collision of Trains Near Hackensack, N. J.—A Similar Accident in New Hampshire Causes the Loss of Three Lives, while Five Persons are Badly Wounded.

New York, Oct. 19.—When the last express on the Pennsylvania Railroad, leaving Jersey City at 8:15 last night, rounded the curve near the Meadow coal bridge, about five miles out, the engineer saw through the thick fog the outlines of a car on the track only a few hundred feet ahead. The express was running at the rate of forty-five miles an hour. The engineer applied the air-brakes as quickly as he could and whistled the danger signal, but his attempt was in vain. The engine struck the car with terrific force, telescoping it and throwing the fragments in every direction.

The panting engine had scarcely stopped when the train bound east, leaving Newark on the Lehigh Valley Road at 8:10, dashed into the forward end of the ... Engineer ... Hall, peeping through the fog, saw the wreck. He did everything in his power to stop his train on its death-bearing course, but it was too late. With an awful crash the Newark train rushed upon the overturned car and was thrown down the embankment. Over and over tolled the cars of human freight, and upon the night air rose the horrible shrieks of the dying. ...

Judge Foraker's Plurality for Governor Estimated at 20,000—The Vote on the Legislative Ticket Very Close, and the Result Still in Doubt—The Prohibitionists Poll 23,000 Votes—Views of Governor Hoadly and Dr. Leonard.

Columbus, O., Oct. 15.—Unofficial returns received up to two a. m. from nearly all the precincts canvassed since midnight make Foraker's plurality touch 21,000, with the rest of the ticket likely to exceed that, and give the Prohibitionists 23,000 votes and the Greenbackers 2,000, on a total vote of over 700,000. The State Committee claims that the Legislature is Republican on joint ballot without the fourteen members from Hamilton County by at least five and probably nine. If Hamilton County is Democratic the Senate would likely have one Democratic majority. With Hamilton County the Republicans would have a strong majority on joint ballot and a working majority in each branch.

There are strong indications that there will be trouble and attempts at fraud in connection with the majority in the next Legislature. Both the Democratic and Republican State Executive Committees have been at their respective headquarters all day, each claiming that they have a majority on joint ballot. The Democratic committee claims fifty-six members ...

RECOLLECTIONS BESIDE ONE AT REST.

As thou art ... there,

... hanging about it, and its only features to speak of seemed to be eyes. Eyes it had past all mistake. Never did I see anything like the way in which it glared at our good provisions within. I have seen what a famished wolf looks like, and I should hardly think a famished wolf worth comparing with that creature. It was ravenous after what it saw. ...

While the creature was thus engaged, I contrived to slip quietly from my dark corner by the door, and catching up a big stick, went out at the back of the house. I stole around as noiselessly as I could toward the window. There were, as I said, young fir trees on that side of the house, so that with a little care it was not difficult to approach the place unobserved. When I got to within a few yards, I saw that the man—for the creature was a man—was still hard at work trying to force a way in.

AN ESCAPED CONVICT.

A good many people were soon got together, mostly our own hands, and I directed and encouraged them as well as I could to get the fire under. But they were a stolid, heavy set of fellows, those Russians, and the way in which they take care not to over-exert themselves at a fire is enough to drive an Englishman wild. ...

What between the apathy of those lazy scoundrels generally and want of water, it was soon plain that the sheds which were on fire could not be saved, and that what we had to look to was the mill itself. The danger of the main building was increasing every moment, for the fire was beginning to make its way along the shingled roof of which I spoke.

I could see what had to be done—those shingles had to be stripped off. I had a ladder reared against the building, and called for volunteers to mount it. ...

"I went in and proceeded to devour his dinner. I was a little nervous in view of my coming responsibility, and I tried to think of everything I had read applicable to machinery. I knew how to start the thing and I knew how to stop it, but that was about all. After dinner I boldly walked up, and when everything was in readiness, turned the little lost wheel. Away she went. One of the hands, an old negro, remarked to some one who stood near him: 'Dat white man un'erstan' his business, she's yer bound, he do.' I was getting along finely, and I saw that the proprietor was pleased. A spring of cold water gushed out of the ground a short distance from the mill. I went down to get a drink. Just as I stooped down an awful jar shook the earth. My gracious! the mill's boiler had exploded. The proprietor, who escaped unhurt, rushed at me with dangerous fury. I thought that I would cool him off with a pleasant remark, and I said to him:

"'Hold on, Cap'n, why didn't you tell me the thing was loaded?'

"The pleasant remark was a failure, for I saw that he could not take a joke. He rushed into a shanty, brought out a Winchester rifle and shot at me as long as I was in the neighborhood. The firing, I think, stopped about sundown that evening. I was glad when I came to the mill, but I was a great sight gladder when I got away."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The program was opened by a finely rendered piano duet by Mrs. O. D. Wood and Mrs. F. A. Smith.

President E. H. Green then delivered a solid and instructive address, demonstrating how the society was progressing, and expressed the opinion that it would never die. After which Miss Maud Loveday favored the audience with a fine guitar solo.

Mrs. L. E. Allen, in an excellent selection entitled "Old Inventions Revived," showed how our forefathers were entitled to more credit than is usually given them.

During an intermission the society were surprised and delighted by a serenade from the East Jordan Band, several fine selections being rendered.

Hampton's Nose in Charlevoix Matters.
From the Petoskey Record:

The removal of Mr. Smith in due course was to have been expected, but the appointment of Chas. J. Strang in his place was a great surprise to the democrats of Charlevoix. Mr. Eaton, one of the most prominent democrats of the county, a man who has done as much as any, and far more than most men for the interests of Charlevoix was a candidate; and if Mr. Smith must go, Eaton was the almost unanimous choice of the democrats. Mr. Hampton has shouldered the whole responsibility for appointments in the 10th district, and is a bigger man than congressman Fisher. That is understood; but the 10th district is hardly large enough for a gentleman of his excessive political proportions. Therefore he kindly relieves the democrats of Charlevoix of the trouble of deciding who they want for postmaster, and in a fifteen minute seance ...

NASBY (MARTER.)

He Preaches a Sermon, Taking for His Text the Parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

CONFEDRIT X ROADS, (Wich is in the State uv Kentucky,) October 14, 1885.

The blow hez fallen. Noose cum to the Corners last nite that the only three Dimekrats in this visinity wuz to resceive the three federal appintments in this destrik, and that Deacon Pogram, Issaker Gavitt and myself wuz to be left out in the cold. These three men wuz allus Republiklns till last fall, when they votid fur Cleveland becoz they beleeved in civil servis reform.

Outraged at this I called the faithful ez the Corners afore my winder in the Basteel at the Corners to preech em a short sermon on the pollitikle sitooashun, ez it effex us.

It wuz a teching site. The Deekin, Bascom, Issaker Gavitt and me all okkepy cells adjinin, and when the awjence assembled in front uv the jale, we all stood behind the bars, that the indignashen uv the people might be aroused to the topmost pitch. It hed the desired effect. I never saw sich a vehement protest before: Mrs. Bascom hez bin runnin the bar sence the arrest and confinement uv her husband, and ez she hez bin compellin us me to pay cash down for ther likker, the protest agin Bascom's further confinement wuz emphatic.

"Releese unto us Bascom," wuz the cry, and the heft uv em added, "Ef it is necessary fur the releese uv Bascom to turn old Nasby onto us, we kin stand even that."

I thankt em fur this expresshun uv confidence and love, and perceedid with my discourse.

...publicans against the determined efforts of the whole Democratic party to continue him in slavery. Everything, therefore, that Judge Thurman says to prove to the colored man that he is now better off than he ever was before is a eulogy of the Republican party, to whom his improved condition is due. But the mere fact of his better condition in "all that feeds or clothes" him does not affect the fact that politically he is forcibly deprived of his right as a citizen wherever the Democratic party in the South has power. In short, the Democratic party presents to him two alternatives: he can earn a decent living provided he relinquishes all his civil rights; or, if he insists upon voting, he stands a good chance of losing not only a decent living, but life itself. —Detroit Post.

DEMOCRATIC "ECONOMY."

The Increase of Expenditures and Decrease of Revenue under the Cleveland Administration.

When the Democratic National administration came into power, last March, the country was promised by the Democratic organs and orators, and by President Cleveland's inaugural, with a reign of economy and reform. The books were going to be overhauled, reform methods adopted, unnecessary officials discharged, needless expenditures cut off, and all rascality and extravagance eliminated. They charged that the Republicans had not collected the revenues as strictly as they should, and that they had been reckless and extravagant in expenditures. They assured the people that they were going to show how much cheaper the Government could be run "on business principles."

Well, this "reform" Democratic Administration has now been in power seven months. It has not yet presented a balance-sheet, but the monthly reports of the Secretary of the Treasury show its receipts and expenditures, with usually a comparison with those of 1884. From these monthly reports of the Secretary of the Treasury the following figures are taken:

BANQUET TO GENERAL LOGAN.

The Senator's Views Upon the Issues Before the Country.

A banquet was recently tendered General John A. Logan, in Baltimore, by the Logan Invincibles. The feature of the evening was General Logan's speech. After expressing gratification and high appreciation of the honor of being the guest of the club, and having paid a compliment to Baltimore and her citizens, General Logan entered upon a discussion of the present situation of the country under a Democratic Administration. Referring to the right of suffrage he said that the Government was a republic only in name, because thousands of legal voters in many States are denied the right to deposit their ballots. They are beaten with clubs and shot down like wild beasts for desiring to exercise the rights of citizens.

"It is the duty of every honest man," said he, "no matter what his party, to throw his influence in opposition to this political oligarchy." He said that the only way the Government can be made a republic in fact is by educating all classes of people. "The Republican party," he said, "did its best to inaugurate a system of education for the illiterate classes, so that the value of the ballot might be appreciated." "But," said he, "the same elements that made war against the Union and now dominate the State governments in the South by a system of terrorism and fraud have by their votes in Congress prevented appropriations as well as the passage of bills, which would have aided materially in bringing about this result." He trusted that the time was not far distant when education would be universal, and when all citizens, whites and blacks, shall have equal protection in the exercise of free speech and an honest suffrage.

General Logan claimed the men who committed political outrages in the South were members of the "parties of States rights, free trade, secession, and relentless persecution of those they can not control," and asks if the present Administration will try to remedy the evil, or will it be encouraged in order to maintain the "Solid South." He reminded those Democrats who cried "bloody shirt" that it was the Democ-...

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"Shall We Have Another Chance In the Next World?"

The Doctrine That "As the Tree Falls So It Must Lie" Practically and Forcibly Presented — Another Chance Improbable.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., October 18.—Prof. Henry Eyre Brown opened the services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning, with the organ solo Sonata in C Minor, by Rhineberger. Dr. Talmage read and expounded the 31st chapter of the First Book of Samuel, showing that the old grudge between the Philistines and the Israelites was kept good, and that people generally die as they live. The hymn sung was:

When Thou, my righteous Judge, shalt come
To take Thy ransomed people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at Thy right hand!

The subject of the sermon was: "Shall We Have Another Chance in the Next World?" The text was:

If the tree fall toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.—Ecclesiastes, xi., 3.

There is a hovering hope in the minds of a vast multitude that there will be an opportunity in the next world to correct the mistakes of this; that, if we do make complete shipwreck of our earthly life, it will be on a shore up which we may walk to a palace; that, as a defendant may lose his case in the Circuit Court and carry it up to the Supreme Court or Court of Chancery, and get a reversal of judgment in his behalf, and the costs being thrown over on the other party, so if we fail in the earthly trial, we may in the higher jurisdiction of eternity have the judgment of the lower court set aside, all the costs remitted, and we be victorious defendants forever.

My object in this sermon is to show that common-sense, as well as my text, declares that such an expectation is chimerical. You say that the impenitent man having got into the next world and seeing the disaster, will, as a result of that disaster, turn, the pain the cause of his reformation. But you can find ten thousand instances in this world of men who have done wrong and distress...

...his path all the way descended until at sixty-eight he became a suicide. If 500 years did not make antediluvians any better, but only made them worse, the ages of eternity could have no effect except prolongation of depravity.

"But," says some one, "in the future state evil surroundings will be withdrawn and elevated influences substituted, and hence expurgation and sublimation and glorification." But the righteous, all their sins forgiven, have passed on to the beatific state and consequently the unsaved will be left alone. It can not be expected that Dr. Duff, who exhausted himself in teaching Hindoos the way to Heaven, and Dr. Abeel, who gave his life in the evangelization of China, and Adoniram Judson, who toiled for the redemption of Borneo, should be sent down by some celestial missionary society to educate those who wasted all their earthly existence. Evangelistic and missionary efforts are ended. The entire kingdom of the morally bankrupt by themselves, where are the salvable influences to come from? Can one speckled and bad apple in a barrel of diseased apples turn the other apples good? Can those who are themselves down help others up? Can those who have failed in the business of the soul, pay the debts of their spiritual insolvents? Can a million wrongs make one right? Poneropolis was a city where King Philip of Thracia put all the bad people of his kingdom. If any man had opened a primary school at Poneropolis I do not think the parents from other cities would have sent their children there. Instead of amendment in the other world, all the associations, now that the good are evolved, will be degenerating and downward. You would not want to send a man to a cholera or yellow fever hospital for his health, and the great lazaretto of the next world, containing the diseased and plague-struck, will be a poor place for moral recovery. If the surroundings in this world were crowded of temptation, the surroundings in the next world, after the righteous have passed up and on, will be a thousand per cent. more crowded of temptation. The Count of Chateaubriand made his little son sleep at night at the top of a castle turret, where the winds howled and where specters were said to haunt the place; and while the mother and sisters almost died with fright the son tells us that the process gave him nerves that could not tremble and a courage that never faltered. But I don't think that...

...eyes for years and years, and years, and all the benign voices of earth and Heaven have urged us to get on board, as she might sail away any moment, and after awhile she sails without us, is it common sense to expect her to come back? You might as well go out on the Highlands at Neversink and call to the Aurania after she has been three days out, and expect her to return, as to call back an opportunity for Heaven when it once has sped away. All Heaven offered us as a gratuity and for lifetime we refuse to take it, and then rush on the bosses of Jehovah's buckler demanding another chance. There ought to be, there can be, there will be, no such thing as posthumous opportunity. Thus our common sense agrees with my text: "If the tree fall toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth there it shall be."

You see that this idea lifts this world up from an unimportant way station to a platform of stupendous issues, and makes all eternity whirl around this hour. But one trial for which all the preparation must be made in this world, or never made at all. That piles up all the emphasis and all the climaxes and all the destinies into life here. No other chance! Oh, how that augments the value and the importance of this chance! Alexander, with his army, used to surround a city and then would lift a great light in token to the people that, if they surrendered before that light went out all would be well, but if once the light went out then the battering rams would swing against the wall, and demolition and disaster would follow. Well, all we need to do for our present and everlasting safety is to make surrender to Christ, the King and Conqueror; surrender of our hearts, surrender of our lives, surrender of everything. And he keeps a great light burning—light of gospel invitation, light kindled with the wood of the cross and flaming up against the dark night of our sin and sorrow. Surrender while that great light continues to burn, for after it goes out there will be no other opportunity of making peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Talk of another chance! Why, this is a supernal chance. In the time of Edward VI., at the battle of Musselburg, a private soldier, seeing that the Earl of Huntley had lost his helmet, took off his own helmet and put it upon the head of the Earl, and the head of the private soldier uncovered, he was soon slain, while his com...

The Increase of Insanity.

Boston supports 800 insane, says Mr. T. B. Sanborn, not 75 of whom will recover! This is frightful! Insanity has increased 40 per cent. in a decade and most of the cases are incurable. Whatever the individual cause may be, the fact remains that Uric Acid blood sets the brain on fire, destroys its tissues, and then comes some form of fatal lunacy.

Nothing is so pitiable as a mind diseased. Most brain troubles begin in the stomach; then if the blood is filled with uric acid, caused by failure of kidney action, and the consequent destruction of the blood life—albumen—you have the fuel and the flame and a brain in full blaze as when one raves, or in slow combustion, as in milder forms of insanity. Rev. E. D. Hopkins, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., a few years ago was confined in an asylum. He took a terrible cold while aiding in putting out a fire in a neighbor's burning house, and for twenty-five years that cold was slowly filling his blood with uric acid and finally the deadly work was done. The case looked hopeless but he happily used Warner's safe cure and recovered. That was three years ago and having ridden his blood of all surplus uric acid, he has remained well until this day.

It is indeed a terrible thing to lose one's mind, but it is a more terrible thing to suffer such a condition when it can be so easily prevented.

Are You Going to New Orleans or Florida?

If so, you can go via the MONON ROUTE via Louisville or Cincinnati, and see the Mammoth Cave, Nashville, Blount Springs, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile and the Gulf coast for the same money that will take you through the dreary, uninhabited Mississippi swamps; you can not select a line to the South enjoying half the advantages that are possessed by the MONON ROUTE and its Southern connections.

No one should think of going South without visiting the Mammoth Cave, the great natural wonder of this continent. DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever or Chills and Fever whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

NASBY (MARTER.)

He Preaches a Sermon, Taking for His Text the Parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

In a Bastile, For which [illegible] of the Post-office, Confedrit X Roads, (Wich is in the State uv Kentucky,) October 14, 1885.

The blow hez fallen. Noose cum to the Corners last nite that the only three Dimekratic appointments in this vicinity wuz to [illegible] Fedrel appointments in [illegible] and that Deekin Pogram [illegible] Gavitt and myself wuz to be left out in the cold. These three men wuz allus Republikins till last fall, when they votid fur Cleveland becoz they beleeved in civil servis reform.

Outraged at this I called the faithful uv the Corners afore my winder in the Bastile at the Corners to preech em a short sermon on the pulitikle sitooashun, ez it effex us.

It wuz a teching site. The Deekin, Bascom, Issaker Gavitt and me ah [illegible] reddy in front uv the jate, we all stood behind the bars, that the indignashen uv the peeple might be aroused to the topmost pitch. It hed the desired effect. I never saw sich a vehement protest before. Mrs. Bascom hez bin runnin the bar sence the arrest and confinement uv her husband, and ez she hez bin compellin us me to pay cash down for her likker, the protest ag'n Bascom's farther confinement wuz emphatic.

"Release unto us Bascom," wuz the cry, and the [illegible] uv em added: "Ef it is necessary fur the release uv Bascom to turn old Nasby onto us, we kin stand even that."

I thankt em fur this eggspresshun uv confidence and love, and perceedid with my discourse.

My brethrin—you will please look into the township Bible wich Squire Gavitt yooses to sware witnesses onto, and [illegible] some nigger to reed to you the parable uv the laborers in the vineyard. [illegible]

publicans against the determined efforts of the whole Democratic party to continue him in slavery. Everything, therefore, that Judge Thurman says to prove to the colored man that he is now better off than he ever was before is a eulogy of the Republican party, to whom his improved condition is due. But the mere fact of his better condition in "all that feeds or clothes" him does not affect the fact that politically he is forcibly deprived of his right as a citizen wherever the Democratic party in the South has power. In short, the Democratic party presents to him two alternatives: he can earn a decent living provided he relinquishes all his civil rights; or, if he insists upon voting, he stands a good chance of losing not only a decent living, but life itself. —Detroit Post.

DEMOCRATIC "ECONOMY."

The Increase of Expenditures and Decrease of Revenue under the Cleveland Administration.

When the Democratic National administration came into power, last March, the country was promised by the Democratic organs and orators, and by President Cleveland's Inaugural, with a reign of economy and reform. The books were going to be overhauled, reform methods adopted, unnecessary officials discharged, needless expenditures cut off, and all rascality and extravagance eliminated. They charged that the Republicans had not collected the revenues as strictly as they should, and that they had been reckless and extravagant in expenditures. They assured the people that they were going to show how much cheaper the Government could be run "on business principles."

Well, this "reform" Democratic Administration has now been in power seven months. It has not yet presented a balance-sheet, but the monthly reports of the Secretary of the Treasury show its receipts and expenditures, with usually a comparison with those of 1884. [illegible]

BANQUET TO GENERAL LOGAN.

The Senator's Views Upon the Issues Before the Country.

A banquet was recently tendered General John A. Logan, in Baltimore, by the Logan Invincibles. The feature of the evening was General Logan's speech. After expressing gratification and high appreciation of the honor of being the guest of the club and having paid a compliment to Baltimore and her citizens, General Logan entered upon a discussion of the present situation of the country under a Democratic Administration. Referring to the right of suffrage he said that the Government was a republic only in name, because thousands of legal voters in many States are denied the right to deposit their ballots, they are beaten with clubs and shot down like wild beasts for desiring to exercise the rights of citizens.

"It is the duty of every honest man," said he, "no matter what his party, to throw his influence in opposition to this political oligarchy." He said that the only way the Government can be made a republic in fact is by educating all classes of people. "The Republican party," he said "did its best to inaugurate a system of education for the illiterate classes, so that the value of the ballot might be appreciated." "But," said he "the same elements that made war against the Union and now dominate the State governments in the South by a system of terrorism and fraud have by their votes in Congress prevented appropriations as well as the passage of bills, which would have aided materially in bringing about this result." He trusted that the time was not far distant when education would be universal, and when all citizens, whites and blacks, shall have equal protection in the exercise of free speech and an honest suffrage.

General Logan claimed the men who committed political outrages in the South were members of the "parties of States rights, free trade, secession, and relentless persecution of those they can not control," and asks if the present Administration will try to remedy the evil, or will it be encouraged in order to maintain the "Solid South." He reminded those Democrats who cried "bloody shirt" that it was the Democracy that was responsible for every [illegible]

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"Shall We Have Another Chance In the Next World?"

The Doctrine That "As the Tree Falls So It Must Lie" Practically and Forcibly Presented — Another Chance Impossible.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., October 18.—Prof. Henry Eyre Brown opened the services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning, with the organ solo Sonata in C Minor, by Rheinberger. Dr. Talmage read and expounded the 31st chapter of the First Book of Samuel, showing that the old grudge between the Philistines and the Israelites was kept good, and that people generally die as they live. The hymn sung was:

When Thou, my righteous Judge, shalt come
To take Thy ransomed people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at Thy right hand?

The subject of the sermon was: "Shall We Have Another Chance in the Next World?" The text was:

If the tree fall toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.—Ecclesiastes, xi., 3.

There is a hovering hope in the minds of a vast multitude that there will be an opportunity in the next world to correct the mistakes of this; that, if we do make complete shipwreck of our earthly life, it will be on a shore up which we may walk to a palace; that, as a defendant may lose his case in the Circuit Court and carry it up to the Supreme Court or Court of Chancery, and get a reversal of judgment in his behalf, and the costs being thrown over on the other party, so if we fail in the earthly trial, we may in the higher jurisdiction of eternity have the judgment of the lower court set aside, all the costs remitted, and we be victorious defendants forever.

My object in this sermon is to show that common-sense, as well as my text, [illegible]

his path all the way descended until at sixty-eight he became a suicide. If 800 years did not make antediluvians any better, but only made them worse, the ages of eternity could have no effect except prolongation of depravity.

"But," says some one, "in the future state evil surroundings will be withdrawn and elevated influences substituted, and there expurgation and sublimation and glorification." But the righteous, all their sins forgiven, have passed on to the beatific state and consequently the unsaved will be left alone. It can not be expected that Dr. Duff, who exhausted himself in teaching Hindoos the way to Heaven, and Dr. Abeel, who gave his life in the evangelization of China, and Adoniram Judson, who toiled for the redemption of Borneo, should be sent down by some celestial missionary society to educate those who wasted all their earthly existence. Evangelistic and missionary efforts are ended. The entire kingdom of the morally bankrupt by themselves, where are the salvable influences to come from? Can one speckled and bad apple in a barrel of diseased apples turn the other apples good? Can those who are themselves down help others up? Can those who have failed in the business of the soul, pay the debts of their spiritual insolvents? Can a million wrongs make one right? Ponerópolis was a city where King Philip of Thracia put all the bad people of his kingdom. If any man had opened a primary school at Ponerópolis I do not think the parents from other cities would have sent their children there. Instead of amendment in the other world, all the association, now that the good are evolved, will be degenerating and downward. You would not want to send a man to a cholera or yellow fever hospital for his health, and the great lazaretto of the next world, containing the diseased and plague-struck, will be a poor place for moral recovery. If the surroundings in this world were crowded of temptation, the surroundings in the next world, after the righteous have passed up and on, will be a thousand per cent. more crowded of temptation. The Count of Chateaubriand made his little son sleep at night at [illegible] eyes for years and years, and years, and all the benign voices of earth and Heaven have urged us to get on board, as she might sail away any moment, and after awhile she sails without us, is it common sense to expect her to come back? You might as well go out on the Highlands at Neversink and call to the Aurania after she has been three days out, and expect her to return, as to call back an opportunity for Heaven when it once has sped away. All Heaven offered us as a gratuity and for lifetime we refuse to take it, and then rush on the bosses of Jehovah's buckler demanding another chance. There ought to be, there can be, there will be, no such thing as posthumous opportunity. Thus our common sense agrees with my text: "If the tree falls toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth there it shall be."

You see that this idea lifts this world up from an unimportant way station to a platform of stupendous issues, and makes all eternity whirl around this hour. But one trial for which all the preparation must be made in this world, or never never made at all. That piles up all the emphasis and all the climaxes and all the destinies into life here. No other chance! Oh, how that augments the value and the importance of this chance! Alexander, with his army, used to surround a city and then would lift a great light in token to the people that, if they surrendered before that light went out all would be well, but if once the light went out then the battering rams would swing against the wall, and demolition and disaster would follow. Well, all we need to do for our present and everlasting safety is to make surrender to Christ, the King and Conqueror; surrender of our hearts, surrender of our lives, surrender of everything. And he keeps a great light burning—light of gospel invitation, light kindled with the wood of the cross and flaming up against the dark night of our sin and sorrow. Surrender while that great light continues to burn, for after it goes out there will be no other opportunity of making peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Talk of another chance! Why, this is a su[illegible]

The Increase of Insanity.

Boston supports 800 insane, says Mr. T. B. Sanborn, not 75 of whom will recover! This is frightful! Insanity has increased 40 per cent. in a decade and most of the cases are incurable. Whatever the individual cause may be, the fact remains that Uric Acid blood sets the brain on fire, destroys its tissues, and then comes some form of fatal lunacy.

Nothing is so pitiable as a mind diseased. Most brain troubles begin in the stomach; then if the blood is filled with uric acid, caused by failure of kidney action, and the consequent destruction of the blood life—albumen—you have the fuel and the flame and a brain in full blaze as when one raves, or in slow combustion, as in hidden forms of insanity. Rev. E. D. Hopkins, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., a few years ago was confined in an asylum. He took a terrible cold while aiding in putting out a fire in a neighbor's burning house, and for twenty-five years that cold was slowly filling his blood with uric acid and finally the deadly work was done. The case looked hopeless but he happily used Warner's safe cure and recovered. That was three years ago and having ridden his blood of all surplus uric acid, he has remained well until this day.

It is indeed a terrible thing to lose one's mind, but it is a more terrible thing to suffer such a condition when it can be so easily prevented.

INQUIRER asks: What must I do to make my hands soft? Do nothing.—Boston Courier.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

Scrofula of Lungs.

I am now 49 years old, and have suffered for the last fifteen years with a lung trouble. I have spent thousands of dollars to arrest the march of this disease, but temporary relief was all that I obtained. I was unfit for any manual labor for several years. A friend strongly recommended the use of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), claiming that he himself had been greatly benefited by its use in some lung troubles. I resolved to try it. The results are remarkable. My cough has left me, my strength has returned, and I weigh sixty pounds more than I ever did in my life. It has been three years since I stopped the use of the medicine, but I have had no return of the disease, and there are no pains or weakness left in my lungs. I do the hardest kind of work. T. J. HOLT. Montgomery, Ala., June 25, 1885. Swift's Specific is entirely vegetable. Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free. RIDGE'S FOOD

A physician in a Southern city writes that he has tried some of the foods highly praised in the medical journals for his own infant; and though some were better than others, none were right in their action upon the bowels. The little one pined and they had almost despaired of its life, when Ridge's Food was tried, and the little one at once improved, and perfect action of the bowels resulted.

What Are You Givin' Us?

A late issue of Harper's Weekly says: "The somewhat astonishing statement is made that there is standing in a good state of preservation, under the waters of Lake Michigan, a forest of considerable extent, which has been submerged for centuries. Fishermen get their nets caught in it. Occasionally one of its trees is uprooted and cast ashore, and the people who have seen such trees declare that they are an unknown variety, and that, although seemingly sound when they rise above the water, they soon decay and perish on exposure to the air."

A Novel Swindle.

The following advertisement has caught many victims of late:

ATTENTION, SINNERS! A book that every sporting man should read: better than anything of the kind ever printed; 300 pages and no trash. Price 50 cents. Sent, postage free, by WOOD & CO., 1,385 Girard ave.

The scamp in Philadelphia who manipulated this fraud would send copies of the New Testament to his victims. The Testaments cost him $5 a hundred. He received $50 for them, thus making a profit of $12. At one time he received 100 applications per day. He is now under bonds to appear for trial in the coming term of the United States court.

BUFFALO AS A RAILROAD CENTER.

All through the summer the harbor is full of life—tugs dart hither and yon, lake vessels, big and little, receive their cargoes, huge steamers and propellers take on passengers or freight for the upper lakes, while numerous pleasure-yachts, named for sea nymphs and dryads, steam toward the International bridge, which opens in the center with massive swing, and permits them to pass through on their way "down the river." Finally, and most important, stretching in all directions, are the iron rails over which the commerce of the great West reaches the Eastern seaboard.

To win the heart of this queen city to-day you must court her in the role of a railway king. You must come as the projector of a new trunk line, prepared to lay your millions at her feet in return for a site from which to throw another girdle around the city, and with thousands more to invest for a commanding lot on Delaware Avenue, "The Circle," or fronting one of the many park approaches, whereupon to erect a palace of Medina sandstone, or a cypress-shingled villa rivaling those of Newport or the famous Jerusalem Road.

Never was the imperial position of Buffalo appreciated as now, when all signs point to the realization of the prophecy that she is destined to sit "like a commercial Constantinople stretching along the Bosporus of the broad Niagara, and holding the keys of the Dardanelles that shall open and shut the gates of trade for the regions east and west." A study of the globe will show why, from the founder of the city in 1797 down to the latest railway manager of 1885, eager to obtain an approach to the International Bridge, already inadequate to the demands of traffic and mooting the revival of the old scheme of tunneling under the Niagara, every sagacious person has predicted a great commercial future ...

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

MORMONISM has begun making inroads among Methodists and Presbyterians about Bridgeport, Ill.

NO FEWER than 157 professors at German universities are between the ages of seventy and ninety, of whom the greater part still lecture. Ranke, at ninety, is the oldest.

THE explosion of the honey-combed Flood Rock in Hell Gate Channel, New York, a few days ago, was one of the most gigantic artificial blasts in the world's history.

THE owners of Empress, the vicious elephant, who has just found her third human victim in an unoffending circus attache at Philadelphia, hesitate about taking the animal's life.

FROM present appearances the potato crop of the country is in a precarious condition. The rot is attacking it severely in New York and New England, and is reported from some portions of Michigan.

IN the East the play of "The Breadwinners" is being performed. During the performance a loaf is given to each lady in the audience. When that play strikes the broad, untrammeled West, the actors who displease the audience will be buried out of sight in bread crumbs.

DR. CHAS. SKETCHLEY, of Anaheim, Cal., who is engaged in the ostrich farming industry, is so well satisfied with his preliminary experiment that he is about to leave for South Africa for the purpose of bringing back a large number of birds to add to his collection.

THE oak tree planted by Lord Byron at Newstead Abbey is still flourishing, although the alder on which he cut the names "Byron and Augusta" long since died. The portion of the tree on which the names were carved is preserved among the mementoes of the poet in the Abbey.

THE President is evidently an admirer of the immortal "bard of Avon." One Shakespeare gets a postoffice in Michigan and another from Philadelphia has been commissioned to visit Spain for the purpose of making an exhaustive investigation into the causes progress and treatment of Asiatic cholera.

THE widow of Van Cott, who is conducting revival meetings in Philadelphia, addresses gatherings every evening and on five afternoons, besides twice on Sundays, with the addition of Sunday-school services. She does most of the talking on these occasions, and prays five times at each service. Such work would be impossible but for her splendid physique.

THE families of the striking miners in the district near Pittsburgh, Pa., were in a starving condition on the 20th, and it was expected that the men, to save the lives of their wives and children, would soon resume work. The strike has lasted seven weeks.

MISS EFFIE LITTLEFIELD, a Scotch woman, hanged herself on the 20th to a chandelier in a Boston hotel. She crossed the Atlantic recently, [illegible] brother in Chicago.

NEAR Williamsport, Pa., on the 20th two passenger trains collided, two employes being killed and several persons severely injured.

A FOOT of snow was reported on the 20th from nearly all parts of the peninsula of Michigan, blockading the railroads.

AT Indianapolis on the 20th the brother of a young white woman, who had been assaulted by a negro, shot the fiend, inflicting a fatal wound. The tragedy took place in the court-house.

ACCORDING to the figuring of the New York Produce Exchange, the visible supply of wheat on the 20th was 45,170,182 bushels, and of corn 4,837,423 bushels.

AT Youngstown, O., a lad named Tom Muldoon stole over $2,000 from his mother on the 20th and ran off. The police found him in a drunken sleep in a shed with most of the money in his pockets.

THE Cane Hill College, at Fayetteville, Ark., the oldest institution of learning in the State, was destroyed by an incendiary fire on the 20th. Loss, $50,000; no insurance.

THREE kegs of gunpowder exploded in the grocery store of Pettit & Lantz, at Mexico, Mo., on the 21st, and $50,000 worth of property was destroyed by the fire which ensued.

MRS. GEORGE VANNESS, of New Brooklyn, N. J., gave birth to four children on the 21st, two boys and two girls.

ROBERT J. HOXEY, a wife-murderer, was taken from jail by a mob on the 21st at Holly Springs, Miss., and hanged.

ADVICES of the 21st say that seven men were killed by the recent boiler explosion at a saw-mill in Ridgeville, S. C.

A DERRICK at the Lowell (Mass.) waterworks fell on the 21st, killing four men.

MRS. JOHN CONWAY and her daughter Kate were found dead in their dwelling in Kansas City on the 21st, having been murdered by an unknown person. Thirty dollars in money was carried off by the assassin.

A DREAM OF REST.

In quiet [illegible] tale,
[illegible] bowers,
I oft [illegible],
And lull to sleep life's restless hours.

I dream of clouds woven soft
From [illegible] warp and woof of life;
And thus in dreamland find I oft
My heart [illegible] from toil and strife.

The dawn and day clasp hands and meet
To weave a garland for the moon;
Then o'er [illegible],
Hangs [illegible] smiling moon.

I dream of [illegible] beneath the sea,
Where [illegible] their harps in sing;
And old [illegible] their songs set free,
And [illegible] waters ring.

And then I dream of isles afar,
Beyond our worldly care and strife;
Where [illegible] their leaping waters mar—
And drop a tear for earth and life.

I see cerulean waters nigh
The sun [illegible] isles that softly rise,
And [illegible]
Like angel dreams of Paradise.

I hear the [illegible] robes of spring
Trail [illegible] the bright elysian wood;
I feel the breath of spirit wing

I see the trees immortal grow,
Bright flowers deck the emerald sod;

I drink these joys like drinking wine,

STORY OF THE TELEGUST.

The Wonderful Effects of a "Gyrating Current."

The afternoon was dull and gloomy. It had been raining all day, and the bad weather had kept people in doors, so that I had been alone in my study and able to bend all my energies to the difficult and [illegible] task in hand. I had reached a stopping place—or rather a place where a consultation of authorities was necessary, and with a sigh of relief I picked up a volume of Tyndall's essays, and, throwing myself on the sofa, lit a cigar, and gradually became absorbed in the close reasoning of that master of modern physics.

For some reason a certain passage in one of his lectures attracted my attention strongly. It was this:

"We have the strongest reason for believing that what the nerves convey to the brain is, in all cases, motion. It is the motion excited by sugar in the nerves of taste which, transmitted to the brain, produces the sensation of sweetness, while bitterness is the result of motion produced by aloes."

I put aside the book to follow out an odd train of thought which the passage suggested. Just then my cigar went out; and as I arose to get a match to relight it, some one knocked at the door. I opened it. The hallway was dark, and for a moment I could discern no one; but gradually the figure of a man became visible some distance off, as if he had hastily moved away.

"Why don't you come in?" I demanded. The man hesitated a moment, and then entered.

[illegible]

in the house, with no immediate help nearer than the servants in the distant kitchen. Fortunate thought, however, there was the district telegraph call. I would signal for a policeman at once and have this noxious intruder summarily ejected.

He evidently suspected nothing from my moving toward the instrument, for, smiling in a quizzical way, he went on:

"Now, wait—wait. Don't let your hospitable instincts impoverish your larder on my account. Don't press anything upon me. Fact is, I've called to ask you to dine with me, and, as the weather is bad—yes, it's raining again—suppose we enjoy the banquet right here."

"Dine with you—here? Confound it, sir, I don't wish to dine with you, and this room is not a restaurant," I replied angrily.

"I've brought the dinner with me," he continued calmly. "There's a lovely brace of woodcock—"

I felt my temper give way.

"Will you be good enough to have this—"

"In my hat," he interrupted, completing his sentence, "besides the soup and—well, see for yourself."

He drew another package from the interior of his extraordinary head covering, and opening it displayed some dozen or two of white pills. These he carefully divided into two heaps, about an equal number of pills in each.

"There," he said in a satisfied way, "a dinner—a feast for two—of twelve courses!"

I had heard of lunatics assaulting people with deadly weapons, but never of their forcing their victims to swallow poison in the shape of pills. Would that policeman never come? I sounded the signal again.

Meanwhile my eccentric visitor had possessed himself of a pitcher of water and had filled two glasses. Then returning to the table, he proceeded to unwind his roll of wire, which he separated into four lengths. To one end of each of two pieces he attached a little button of bright silvery metal by a short scrap of gold wire of exceeding fineness. To the ends of the other pieces he affixed what appeared to be light metal rings or bracelets.

Somehow his performance just then began to arouse an unaccountable interest in me, and I found myself almost involuntarily closely watching him.

Now from his inner coat pocket he produced a case, such a one as homœopathic physicians use for carrying their medicines, and also, like theirs, this case contained row upon row of minute vials, each one neatly labeled in some unreadable hieroglyphics. I could not discern the contents of the bottles, except to see that some contained powders and some liquids. Lastly, he unwrapped the newspaper from the box which he had taken from his hat. About this box there was nothing peculiar in its external appearance, but its owner evidently attached some extraordinary importance to it, for he carefully placed it on the table as far from me as possible, and then, after fastening the free ends of his wires to it, covered it up with his hat.

"The apparatus—ahem!—the apparatus which I am about to exhibit," he began, with an explanatory wave of his hand, "is not so perfectly arranged as it might be. In fact, I have and always expect to have many improvements in contemplation. Still, I think we may obtain favorable results. Will you approach the festive board?"

I listened anxiously for the expected

THE ELECTIONS.

The Democrats Carry New York, by Good Majority

As we go to press the dispatches indicate that the Democrats have carried New York by a clear majority, and have gained several members of the Legislature in Connecticut.

"LITTLE MACK" DEAD.

Gen. Geo. B. McClellan Dies of Neuralgia of the Heart, at His Home.

Gen. George B. McClellan, ex-commander of the army of the United States, died suddenly at ten o'clock on the morning of the 29th, from exhaustion, produced by repeated shocks of neuralgia of the heart, at his home on Orange mountain, N. J. Gen. McClellan was 59 years of age, and was in robust health up to a day or two before his death. The funeral will occur in New York, and, at the request of Mrs. McClellan, will be without any military display whatever. Eminent Union and Confederate officers will be among the pall bearers. The authorities at Washington have ordered the proper honors to be paid to the memory of the dead General.

The Historical Society.

President E. H. Green, presiding. Friday evening, Oct. 30, the Society met in the pleasant parlors of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bennett. A large number of members was in attendance, and were entertained by the program as arranged by the Executive Committee.

Mrs. Alice Cochran opened the same by a fine piano selection. The subject for debate, "Resolved, that the Chinese ought to be excluded from the United States," was then ably discussed by R. W. Kane and H. Lee Iddings on the affirmative, and Dr. Carlstein and Robert Miller on the negative. Rev. A. M. Parmenter and E. M. Clark also participated in the debate.

The judges chosen were Mr. H. Bennett, Mr. D. C. Loveday, and Mrs. Richard Lake, who decided that the Celestials should stay until further notice.

Mrs. Dr. Carlstein brought down the house by a humorous recitation entitled, "Mrs. Maloney and the Chinese question."

A vocal trio by Mrs. E. M. Clark, Mrs. A. F. Draper, and Miss Kanagy, also a tenor solo by W. A. Smith, were highly appreciated, and closed the entertainment.

The society meets on Friday evening next in the parlors of Mrs. L. E. Allen. Dr. Carlstein will read the first essay of the winter course. Subject: "Napoleon."

Just a Word, As it Were.

Simply to place the SENTINEL upon the ground of consistency, and in view of the fact that little tommy, of the Enterprise, recently told a citizen of Charlevoix that the SENTINEL had been purchased by eastern Supervisors with the county printing, we refer little tommy, and all others whom it may concern, to the following extract from an editorial which appeared in the SENTINEL of April 15, 1885 concerning the position it would take in the issue formed by the Board of Supervisors just previous:

* * * "East Jordan has forfeited any alliance with us she may have hoped for in her inevitable future contest for permanency as the seat of justice. Her methods have been dishonorable, and her mode of warfare has destroyed the entente cordiale which had previously existed. Now, in the natural situation of affairs, Charlevoix is placed where she can with safety to herself, and justice to a majority of all the people of the county, adopt the policy which has been at the bottom of the county seat agitation from the beginning—viz: the permanent location of the seat of justice at a central point. We realize the fact that there is no more good sense in the proposition to keep the county seat on the southern border of the county than there has been to keep it on the western—taking the arguments of our opponents to justify the position. No one can for a minute doubt that the conflict is bound to continue. Why not settle it at once and forever."

That key-note was sounded seven months ago, and it defined the policy which the SENTINEL would pursue until after the spring election of 1886. It took and will maintain that position under the firm conviction that it is in accord with the best interests of Charlevoix county, as against the local benefit of a single town, or the interests of a few non-resident East Jordan property holders. We consider it a policy based upon the broad principle of justice; and, sink or swim, we shall advocate it unflinchingly to the end.

Norwood Notes.

The ground was covered with snow on Sunday morning, it being the first for this season.

George H. VanPelt leaves this week for Chicago, and we shall see no more of him until sometime in February.

A dramatic troupe has been organized in this place and an entertainment in the near future is promised.

Jay C. Guyles has been employed by the Pine Lake Lumber Co., to buy logs and have charge of the mill and men. He will leave this week.

Mr. Smith and wife of Boyne City, were in town over Sunday, the guests of the pastor and wife.

We were strongly tempted to reply to the Journal's article on the action of the Board of Supervisors. There was a fine chance as he was a long ways off his base—but pshaw, what's the use—

Marine.

Capt. Aldrich says the Faxton will run a month yet.

The propellers Friant and Faxton laid in Charlevoix harbor Monday night in stress of weather.

The tug Minnie Warren which has been chartered by Day of Beaver Island for fishing, left Thursday.

The Beaver Island Fish Company will lay up both their tugs here this winter, for extensive repairs to their machinery. There will be twelve steam crafts winter in Charlevoix harbor, and most of them will undergo more or less overhauling to machinery.

The Leland arrived at Elk Rapids last week with her last load of ore for the season. During the season the Leland has made 55 trips between Elk Rapids and St. Ignace, in the space of four months and sixteen days, carrying down 31,226 tons of iron ore.—The Leland is now at Buffalo with a cargo of pig iron.

Clearances from the port of Charlevoix for ports outside the Michigan district for the week ending yesterday evening:

26—Schr. Narragansett, 500 tons pig iron, 70 bu potatoes, Iron Co to Chicago.

28—Schr. Pitch 3,000 bu potatoes, H. A. Copeland to Kenosha.

3—Schr. Geo Marsh, 165 c wood Mosher to Chicago.

2—Schr. Eagle Wing, 240,000 ft. hardwood 200 bu potatoes C. L. Lumber Co. and J. L. Gallup to Chicago.

Antrim County News.

From the Breeze.

Rev. C. N. Coulter's family has left Central Lake for Northport.

Circuit Court for Antrim county convenes next Tuesday, Nov. 10.

Cameron Bros. are buying large quantities of potatoes along the shore of Torch Lake. They pay 23½ cents delivered on the lake. They shipped several thousand bushels last week.

D. H. Stebbins was in town Tuesday and Wednesday, settling up his affairs as postmaster, and formally transferring the Bellaire postoffice to Sam. R. Owen, the new appointee.

It now seems probable that before navigation opens in the spring the Intermediate river from Bellaire to Grass Lake, will have been dredged and cleaned out. Capt. Hall has taken hold of the matter and proposes to run the steamer Time up to Bellaire next season, instead of within a mile, as now.

The annual meeting of the Ministerial Association of the M. E. Church for the Grand Traverse District, will be held at Mancelona, commencing Tuesday, Nov. 19, and continuing until Wednesday evening. The program comprises ten essays and Sunday school services for children.

George C. Lull, for many years a resident of Helena Township, this county, and father of Benjamin F. and George Lull, Jr., suicided Wednesday by taking laudanum. The deceased was upwards of 70 years old, well preserved, and was on the streets of Bellaire shaking hands with friends but a few days since. No cause is yet learned for this sad termination of his life.

Ratings from Hayes.

Old Boreas is making things lively.

Henry Hamlin lost about 100 bushels of potatoes by the freeze of last week.

A. R. Struthers has sold his 40 acre lot on the state road to John Macy.

Andy Holmes sports a new horse and buggy, and we notice he handles the ribbons nicely.

Henry Hare is visiting friends in Hayes and may conclude to prolong his visit all winter.

Rev. B. H. Whitman's family moved to Mantua last week, at which place the elder has been since conference.

Miss Dollie Baker was at home on a visit over the Sabbath.

Miss Sophia Ross commenced a term of school in Eveline last Monday.

The school house site in Dist. No. 2 will be moved from its first location to W. C. Arnold's north line near the Greensky hill.

Fred Smith commenced the erection of the school house at Burgess last Monday.

Wm. Gray, Leroy and Loren Hamlin met with a narrow escape last Monday while putting cornice on Loren Hamlin's house. The staging gave way precipitating the whole party to the ground. Shaking the boys up lively.

Mrs. Hugh Eley of Plymouth, Ind., is visiting her son D. O. Eley.

Tim Norris and family moved to a lumber camp near Cadillac, where they will spend the winter.

Wm. Gray and D. E. Scroggie will commence this week the fitting up of stalls in the basement of Burns & Scroggie's livery barn.

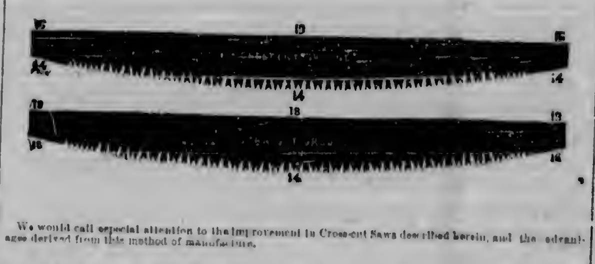
THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.


We would call especial attention to the improvement in Cross-cut Saws described herein, and the advantages derived from this method of manufacture.
All Crescent Saws have heretofore been ground in a straight line from end to end, as shown in the cut marked "Straight-Ground." As a result a saw made 14 gauge thick at the centre of the edge, and beveled to 18 gauge at the back, will be but 16 gauge thick at the edge, near the end of the saw; or in other words, the teeth vary two gauges in thickness on the cutting edge, as shown in diagram.
The improvement in the "Simonds" Crescent-Ground Cross-cut Saws consists in grinding the saw in crescent lines, parallel to the cutting edge, as shown in cut marked "Crescent-Ground," in which case the edge or teeth are of even thickness throughout the entire length of saw, while the ends are decreased two gauges in thickness. In consequence the saw can be ground thinner on the back, as it does not bind in the kerf as others do, and it requires less set, for such tools does an equal amount of work, and has equal thickness of strength to hold the set required for clearance. Being two gauges thinner, and consequently stiffer at the ends, the operator can push as well pull without causing it to "buckle,"—and for felling trees it has been demonstrated that it has no equal in the market.
The Crescent-Ground Cross-cut Saw is manufactured exclusively by this Company, and is protected by two patents, dated Dec. 26, 1882, and we would further say that saws have never before been manufactured in this way, nor substantially in the manner described.

—At four o'clock Monday morning, the large frame barn of John Shapton, Jr., was totally destroyed by fire, with most of its contents including 850 bushels of grain, twelve tons of hay, a large amount of straw, and several valuable farming implements. Total loss, $2,000; insurance, $1,600. It was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

—Last Saturday evening the Charlevoix postoffice was formally transferred to Charles J. Strang, the new postmaster, and the mail and appurtenances were removed to the new quarters in Eaton's building. On Thursday, Mr. Darbellay, one of the new Democratic-Reform Post office inspectors, made a thorough examination of the office, and, although one of the "Republican rascals" was about to vacate it, he pronounced everything about the office in satisfactory shape.

—It was after going to press last week that the sad intelligence reached us that Mrs. Margaret O'Neill was dead. Few die leaving behind them more of that feeling among neighbors which is genuine tribute to goodness, than did Mrs. O'Neill. A kind, motherly old lady, with a heart for others' woes, and a gentle recognition for everyone she met; a good mother, a faithful helpmeet. Mrs. O'Neill was 63 years old, and leaves a husband and eight children. The funeral was held at the residence Friday afternoon, Rev. Father Pinss officiating.

—On the 12th inst. Wm. H. Cook and Mrs. Minnie Korthase were married in Wilson township, this county, their homes being in Jordan township, Antrim county and on the next evening a crowd assembled with tin pans, horns, &c, and proceeded to celebrate the event in loud terms. Before they had finished, however, Ralph Davis, one of the celebrators received a 32-calibre revolver ball in his back. He was carried home by the rest of the crowd, which broke up the party. Davis' life is despaired of. The next evening two men of the party visited the (un)happy groom and tendered him a reception "a la mode de Sullivan," leaving him unfit to receive the caresses of his affectionate bride.—Boyne Citizen.

—The Elk Rapids Iron Co. have a new ad next week.

—The heads are still rolling into the Postmaster General's big basket.

—Wm. Phelps left Monday to spend a few weeks with relatives at Milton, Vt.

—J. S. Smithson and wife of Chicago, came this morning. They return to night.

—C. G. Lewis of Boyne City will remove his stock of clothing to East Jordan.

—W. J. Orser has his new tailor shop on Mitchell street, Petoskey, in running order.

—Rosenthal & Son in their advertising space announce great bargains in clothing and underwear.

—At Deer Creek, a mile above South Arm, up the Jordan, there was three inches of snow last week.

—Two thirds of the old postoffice room, in the SENTINEL building, is for rent. It is one of the best locations in town.

—Special meeting of the K. O. T. M. to-morrow evening at seven o'clock sharp. All members are requested to be present.

—T. F. Nelson, editor of the East Jordan Enterprise, made us a pleasant call yesterday, on his way home from Norwood.

—Mrs. M. J. Stockman, and Mrs. L. E. Allen and daughter left Thursday afternoon for Ohio. Mrs. Stockman visits in Cleveland and Mrs. Allen in Aurora.

—Geo. Walbrook, Antrim Co., dug 110 bushels of potatoes in one day and Henry Petery picked up 100 bushels of them the same day, and they call upon somebody or anybody to beat this record.

—Harry Chamberlain was here Tuesday evening with a good looking young lady from Boyne Falls. If we knew where his other sweetheart lived we would send her a copy of this.—Petoskey Democrat

—It is enough to make tears roll down the cheeks of a mule to see Jack Kirkpatrick and Morris Stockman limping down the street together, and trying to keep step with their game legs and canes.

—"Ren" Barker, of the Reed City Clarion, is getting tired of carrying dead head subscribers. After January 1 a blacklist will appear in his paper, showing just how much each delinquent owes for his paper.

—The SENTINEL is enabled, by virtue of its large and increasing circulation, to give its advertisers extraordinary benefits. Our circulation has increased over seventy-five in the last three weeks, and is still growing. We will cheerfully show our mailing lists to advertisers.

—An exchange very truly says: No sensible man should get angry because a newspaper man duns him for money. A dun is not an impeachment of a subscribers integrity, but is simply an outcropping of the publisher's necessities. For instance, a thousand men owe a man from one to four dollars each. He has to dun them all in order to pay his expenses. Instead of getting angry and stopping the paper because the publisher asks him for what is honestly due, the subscriber should thank the editor for waiting on him so patiently, and pay up like a man.

—Take tea at the M. E. church this evening.

—Mr. Wm. Holley, son-in-law of Wm. B. Taylor is very ill.

—R. W. Kane and wife are visiting Mrs. Kane's parents in Ionia.

—Two buildings in this county were struck by lightning Friday night.

—Geo. B. Guyles and Geo. H. VanPelt of Norwood left Thursday for Chicago by rail.

—The schooner Lottie Mason arrived yesterday with a cargo of wheat for the Charlevoix flouring mill.

—The machinery for the flouring mill arrives from Chicago to-day. They expect to have the engine in working order this week.

—A. J. McLeod and wife returned from their visit to southern Michigan and Canada, last Saturday. Mrs. McLeod's health is much improved.

—The alarm of fire last Wednesday afternoon was caused by a defective flue at the residence of John M. Ackert. The fire department was on the ground in a remarkably short time.

—F. J. Meech left for Detroit, Monday, on business connected with the South Arm mill property. Mrs. Chamberlain, who accompanied him will visit her son Robert in Detroit for some weeks.

—In the new Detroit Tribune, Michigan republicans have a newspaper worthy and deserving their hearty support. The daily at ten cents a week and the weekly at $1.00 a year, or only 50c if taken with the SENTINEL, place these publications within reach of all.

—Within the past month the SENTINEL has added a number of hundred dollars to its plant, and at present has two large orders of metal and wood type on the way. In this connection a hint that subscribers who are in arrears will make us happy by cashing up, will no doubt be sufficient.

—In the first place, the statement in the East Jordan Enterprise to the effect that there were 12 vacant houses on one street in Charlevoix is a consummate lie. In the second place Charlevoix has not 11 unoccupied business houses as East Jordan has. And again not many years ago "Smith says" that the biggest and most notorious liar in Lelanaw county lived in Northport, and fourthly the territory that now claims him as chief liar includes Charlevoix county with Lelanaw.

—It is about six of one and half a dozen of the other as to which can tell the biggest fish stories, Ben Davis of the Progress, or Cooper of the Tribune, but, outside of fish stories Cooper appears to be ahead, although when he has an especially tough yarn to tell he charges it to a correspondent who writes that "Mrs. Barney Clapper, of this township, dug recently 40 bushels of potatoes, picked them up and made 'her man' a shirt before retiring for the day. She stands ready to make oath before any court of competent jurisdiction and our village constable that the above is not only true but that she can cut four cords of 18 inch wood in one day. Fair, golden haired maidens, take a back seat."—Traverse Eagle.

—Northwestern Lumberman. The eastern Michigan man sat by the editor's desk and chatted pleasantly. For a wonder, although he sees a saw-log when he sees one, he did not chose to talk much about the lumber business. Evidently he has a nose for political news, for he fell to speculating as to who will be the next Michigan Senator. "I almost think," he said, "that lightning will this time strike Stockbridge, of Kalamazoo, but I hope the bolt will be hurled upon the head of Perry Hannah, of Traverse City. Hannah is a representative man, and would honor the State. He went to Traverse City in 1854 with about $200 in his pockets, and to-day he is probably a millionaire. I don't speak of this, though, as qualifying for Senator. He is a first-class man in every respect. If he had his way the civil service reform would be worked for all there is in it. You know he is not only one of Michigan's leading lumbermen, but one of her leading merchants as well. In his store the man who deserves to be promoted steps right up in the class. He is not a man either, who thinks he knows everything. In a business way he can receive suggestions from his employes. He is a fair speaker, and a man with a sound head and broad views. But he got rather taken in last summer when he invited the press association to Traverse City. He thought, I suppose, there would be about 100 of the boys, but they came 300 strong. They literally over run the town. His hotel couldn't begin to hold them, for it was about full of summer boarders anyway, so they were spread around; some of them slept in private houses, and some of them on his boats, I think. Everything was as free as water. His three steamers were placed at the command of the visitors, and if they wanted anything from his store they had it without price. The escape cost him $3,500, and I wouldn't wonder a bit if he was glad when the 'boys' left." Assuring the gentleman that the Lumberman would [illegible] Mr. Hannah [illegible] had a chance he grasped his [illegible] and hurried off.

Another Transfer.

C. W. Waldron who recently purchased one half of the Tourists Home at Bay Springs of Mr. R. E. Wilber, has just bought the latter gentlemans half in the hotel and 700 acres adjoining, and now has entire possession.

Mr. Waldron will clear the land and next summer will endeavor to place the hotel property on a paying basis. If he does not succeed it will not be from either lack of capital or energy.

M. E. Church Notes.

M. E. church next Sabbath; preaching in the morning. Mrs. M. M. Johnson will speak at night.

Young People's Vesper service at 6 o'clock.

Song service Saturday evening at 7 o'clock.

Young people's meeting Tuesday evening next week, at the M. E. Church, at which "King Alcohol" will be discussed. The young people have started a weekly paper to be read Tuesday evenings. Editors, W. B. Stover and Miss Cochran.

Historical Society.

Friday evening Nov. 6th, with President E. H. Green presiding, the Historical Society enjoyed the hospitality of L. E. Allen. A large number were out in spite of the inclement weather.

Miss Ella Smith opened the programme with one of her pleasing piano solos, followed with a select reading by W. A. Brown, entitle "Pyramus and Thisbe," from "Saxe" and contained considerable humor as well as a moral plain.

Dr. J. A. Carlstein and A. D. Bradbeer then rendered a vocal duett, entitled "What are the wild waves saying."

Miss Flora Nelson after intermission gave an interesting reading selected from Byron's Poems.

Dr. J. A. Carlstein as speaker of the evening, held the attention of the audience in his usual happy manner for one hour and twenty minutes, following the hero of his sketch (Napoleon) from boyhood to the Battle of Marengo.

The Dr. has promised to continue this subject in the near future, which will be pleasing to those who have heard him.

Mrs. E. M. Clark, Mrs. A. F. Draper and Miss Kanagy closed the exercises with another one of their beautiful vocal trios.

The Society meets this week with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brown. Paper by Mrs. O. D. Wood, subject, "Joan of Arc."

The old capital square at Lansing has been sold for $17,700.

Editor Stead and Mrs. Jarrett have been found guilty in the Armstrong abduction case.

The Mancelona furnace will not remain in blast this winter, it is thought. Fifteen thousand cords of wood will be bought though.

Editor Slusser, of the Mancelona Herald, who confesses that he can distribute six columns of pi and set six columns of straight matter in six hours, with the aid of a boy, has purchased a bicicle, and it is possible that he will make a journey from ocean to ocean in six days, by the watch.—Evening Journal.

Ohio is no longer an "October State." The official vote on the constitutional amendments at the election held October 13 has been canvassed. They were all declared carried by a proclamation issued subsequently by the Governor. The effect will be to change the time of holding the Ohio state elections from October to November and to cause the Boards of Township Trustees to be elected for three years instead of one year.

After mature deliberation, Gov. Alger has determined not to accept a renomination. When his present term of office expires he will retire from the executive chair and devote his attention wholly to his private affairs. The determination of the Governor to retire from public life may be considered authoritative and final. There is little doubt but that Cyrus G. Luce of Coldwater will be the next Governor of Michigan, and it is a pronounced probability, which we hope to see hatch into a certainty, that Perry Hannah will be the next U. S. Senator.

John McCullough, the actor, died at his Philadelphia residence Sunday afternoon. Mr. McCullough's death, although not entirely unexpected, occurred quite suddenly, and was due, as Dr. Hugo Engel, his physician, says, to "an affection of the brain caused by blood poisoning." Dr. Engel asserts that McCullough was not insane, and that it was a mistake to have placed him in Bloomingdale asylum where he was confined for a number of weeks. His failing mental powers were first noticed in the early part of January, 1884, and April of that year he made a [illegible] as Othello in Washington. In Chicago he appeared on the stage for the last time in his life on Sept. 29, 1884, in the character of Spartacus in "The Gladiator," the conditions that night was so bad that the curtain was rung down at the end of the second act.

THE ELECTIONS.

The Democrats Carry New York, by Good Majority

As we go to press the dispatches indicate that the Democrats have carried New York by a clear majority, and have gained several members of the Legislature in Connecticut.

"LITTLE MACK" DEAD.

Gen. Geo. B. McClellan Dies of Neuralgia of the Heart, at His Home.

Gen. George B. McClellan, ex-commander of the army of the United States, died suddenly at ten o'clock on the morning of the 29th, from exhaustion, produced by repeated shocks of neuralgia of the heart, at his home on Orange mountain, N. J. Gen. McClellan was 59 years of age, and was in robust health up to a day or two before his death. The funeral will occur in New York, and, at the request of Mrs. McClellan, will be without any military display whatever. Eminent Union and Confederate officers will be among the pall bearers. The authorities at Washington have ordered the proper honors to be paid to the memory of the dead General.

The Historical Society.

President E. H. Green, presiding. Friday evening, Oct. 30, the Society met in the pleasant parlors of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bennett. A large number of members was in attendance, and were entertained by the program as arranged by the Executive Committee.

Mrs. Alice Cochran opened the same by a fine piano selection. The subject for debate, "Resolved, that the Chinese ought to be excluded from the United States," was then ably discussed by R. W. Kane and H. Lee Iddings on the affirmative, and Dr. Carlstein and Robert Miller on the negative. Rev. A. M. Parmenter and E. M. Clark also participated in the debate.

The judges chosen were Mr. H. Bennett, Mr. D. C. Loveday, and Mrs. Richard Lake, who decided that the Celestials should stay until further notice.

Mrs. Dr Carlstein brought down the house by a humorous recitation entitled, "Mrs. Maloney and the Chinese question."

A vocal trio by Mrs. E. M. Clark, Mrs. A. F. Draper, and Miss Knaagy, also a tenor solo by W. A. Smith, were highly appreciated, and closed the entertainment.

The society meets on Friday evening next in the parlors of Mrs. L. E. Allen. Dr. Carlstein will read the first essay of the winter course. Subject: "Napoleon."

Just a Word, As it Were.

Simply to place the SENTINEL upon the ground of consistancy, and in view of the fact that little tommy, of the Enterprise, recently told a citizen of Charlevoix that the SENTINEL had been purchased by eastern Supervisors with the county printing, we refer little tommy, and all others whom it may concern, to the following extract from an editorial which appeared in the SENTINEL of April 15, 1885, concerning the position it would take in the issue formed by the Board of Supervisors just previous:

* * * "East Jordan has forfeited any alliance with us she may have hoped for in her inevitable future contest for permanency as the seat of justice. Her methods have been dishonorable, and her mode of warfare has destroyed the entente cordiale which had previously existed. Now, in the natural situation of affairs, Charlevoix is placed where she can with safety to herself, and justice to a majority of all the people of the county, adopt the policy which has been at the bottom of the county seat agitation from the beginning—viz: the permanent location of the seat of justice at a central point. We realize the fact that there is no more good sense in the proposition to keep the county seat on the southern border of the county than there has been to keep it on the western—taking the arguments of our opponents to justify the position. No one can for a minute doubt that the conflict is bound to continue. Why not settle it at once and forever."

That key-note was sounded seven months ago, and it defined the policy which the SENTINEL would pursue until after the spring election of 1886. It took and will maintain that position under the firm conviction that it is in accord with the best interests of Charlevoix county, as against the local benefit of a single town, or the interests of a few non-resident East Jordan property holders. We consider it a policy based upon the broad principle of justice; and, sink or swim, we shall advocate it unflinchingly to the end.

Norwood Notes.

The ground was covered with snow on Sunday morning, it being the first for this season.

George H. VanPelt leaves this week for Chicago, and we shall see no more of him until sometime in February.

A dramatic troupe has been organized in this place and an entertainment in the near future is promised.

Jay C. Guyles has been employed by the Pine Lake Lumber Co., to buy logs and have charge of the mill and men. He will leave this week.

Mr. Smith and wife of Boyne City, were in town over Sunday, the guests of the pastor and wife.

We were strongly tempted to reply to the Journal's article on the action of the Board of Supervisors. There was a fine chance as he was a long ways off his base—but pshaw, what's the use—

FRECHE ANN.

Marine.

Capt. Aldrich says the Faxton will run a month yet.

The propellers Friant and Faxton laid in Charlevoix harbor Monday night, in stress of weather.

The tug Minnie Warren which has been chartered by Day of Beaver Island for fishing, left Thursday.

The Beaver Island Fish Company will lay up both their tugs here this winter, for extensive repairs to their machinery. There will be twelve steam crafts winter in Charlevoix harbor, and most of them will undergo more or less overhauling to machinery.

The Leland arrived at Elk Rapids last week with her last load of ore for the season. During the season the Leland has made 55 trips between Elk Rapids and St. Ignace, in the space of four months and sixteen days, carrying down 31,226 tons of iron ore.—The Leland is now at Buffalo with a cargo of pig iron.

Clearances from the port of Charlevoix for ports outside the Michigan district for the week ending yesterday evening:

26—Schr. Narragansett, 500 tons pig iron, 50 bu potatoes, Iron Co. to Chicago.

28—Schr. Pride 3,000 bu potatoes, H. A. Copeland to Kenosha.

29—Schr. Ralph Campbell 4,300 bu potatoes, 200 bu turnips, 28 c wood, C. P. Calson to Chicago.

31—Schr. Morning Star, 120 c wood 60 c bark, 1700 bu potatoes, 4 bbls oil, Sutton & French and A. M. Elliot to Kenosha.

2—Schr. Dan Mabee, 1000 bu potatoes 80 c wood, 800, Bernham & Son to Milwaukee.

3—Schr. Geo. Marsh, 165 c wood Masher to Chicago.

3—Schr. Eagle Wing, 240,000 ft hardwood 200 bu potatoes P. L. Lumber Co. and J. L. Gallin to Chicago.

Antrim County News.

From the Breeze

Rev. C. N. Coulter's family has left Central Lake for Northport.

Circuit Court for Antrim county convenes next Tuesday, Nov. 10.

Cameron Bros. are buying large quantities of potatoes along the shore of Torch Lake. They pay 23½ cents delivered on the lake. They shipped several thousand bushels last week.

D. H. Stebbins was in town Tuesday and Wednesday, settling up his affairs as postmaster, and formally transferring the Bellaire postoffice to Sam. B. Owen, the new appointee.

It now seems probable that before navigation opens in the spring the Intermediate river from Bellaire to Grass Lake, will have been dredged and cleaned out. Capt. Hall has taken hold of the matter and proposes to run the steamer Time up to Bellaire next season, instead of within a mile, as now.

The annual meeting of the Ministerial Association of the M. E. Church for the Grand Traverse District, will be held at Mancelona, commencing Tuesday, Nov. 10, and continuing until Wednesday evening. The program comprises ten essays and Sunday school services for children.

George C. Lull, for many years a resident of Helena Township, this county, and father of Benjamin F. and George Lull, Jr., suicided Wednesday by taking laudanum. The deceased was upwards of 70 years old, well preserved, and was on the streets of Bellaire shaking hands with friends but a few days since. No cause is yet learned for this sad termination of his life.

Ravings from Hayes.

Old Boreas is making things lively.

Henry Hamlin lost about 100 bushels of potatoes by the freeze of last week.

A. R. Struthers has sold his 40 acre lot on the state road to John Macy.

Andy Holmes sports a new horse and buggy, and we notice he handles the ribbons nicely.

Henry Hare is visiting friends in Hayes and may conclude to prolong his visit all winter.

Rev. B. H. Whitman's family moved to Manton last week, at which place the elder has been since conference.

Miss Dollie Baker was at home on a visit over the Sabbath.

Miss Sophia Ross commenced a term of school in Eveline last Monday.

The school house site in Dist. No. 2 will be moved from its first location to W. C. Arnold's north line near the Greensky hill.

Fred Smith commenced the erection of the school house at Burgess last Monday.

Wm. Gray, Leroy and Loren Hamlin met with a narrow escape last Monday while putting cornice on Loren Hamlin's house. The staging gave way precipitating the whole party to the ground. Shaking the boys up lively.

Mrs. Hugh Eley of Plymouth, Ind., is visiting her son D. O. Eley.

Tim Norris and family moved to a lumber camp near Cadillac, where they will spend the winter.

Wm. Gray and D. E. Scroggie will commence this week the fitting up of stalls in the basement of Burns & Scroggie's livery barn.

Tin-types at Bradbeer's.

Fresh Oysters at Jeffries' market.

Boneless Ham at Jeffries. Best thing out. Try it.

Highest cash prices paid for Butter and Eggs at Chamberlain's market.

L. E. Allen is building two, six room houses. For rent as soon as completed.

Cash for Hides and Pelts and first class beef, mutton and poultry at Chamberlain's market.

Dr. A. B. Spinney of Detroit, will be at the Fountain City House on Monday, Nov. 16th. The doctor makes a specialty of all forms of Chronic diseases, particularly, Catarrh, Eye, Ear, Throat and Lung diseases. Best of glasses always on hand. Fits guaranteed. Consultation free.

Sheriff Sale.

Notice is hereby given that by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in favor of Julius H. Wheeler and William Green, against the goods and chattels and real estate of Michael T. McDermott, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, to me directed and delivered, I did on the 28th day of March A. D. 1885, levy upon and take all the right, title and interest of the said Michael T. McDermott in and to the following described real estate, that is to say, all that certain piece and parcel of land described as follows to wit: The sw ¼ of the sw ¼ and the s ½ of the nw ¼ of sec 28 town 31 north, range 7 west, all of which I shall expose for sale at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder at the front door of the day's hall in the village of East Jordan in said county that being the place of holding the Circuit court for the said county of Charlevoix, on the 15th day of Dec. next at 12 o'clock noon.

Dated this 28th day of October A. D. 1885.

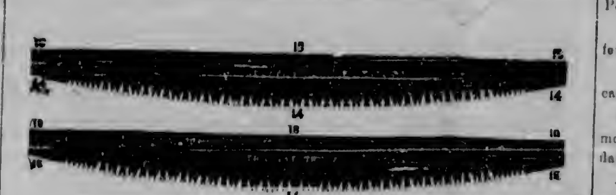
THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.



We would call especial attention to the improvement in Cross-cut Saws described herein, and the advantages derived from this method of manufacture.

All Cross-cut Saws have heretofore been ground in a straight line from end to end, as shown in the cut marked "STRAIGHT GROUND." As a result a saw made 14 gauge thick at the centre of the edge, and beveled to 18 gauge at the back, will be but 10 gauge thick at the edge, near the end of the saw; or in other words, the teeth vary two gauges in thickness on the cutting edge, as shown in diagram.

The improvement in the "Simonds' Crescent-Ground Cross-cut Saws consists in grinding the saw in crescent lines, parallel to the cutting edge, as shown in cut marked "CRESCENT GROUND," in which case the edge or teeth are of even thickness throughout the entire length of saw, while the ends are increased two gauges in thickness. In consequence the saw can be ground thinner on the back, as it does not bind in the kerf as others do, and it requires less set, for each tooth does an equal amount of work, and has equal thickness or strength to hold the set required for clearance. Being two gauges heavier, and consequently stiffer at the ends, the operators can push as well pull without causing it to "buckle,"—and for felling trees it has been demonstrated that it has no equal in the market.

The Crescent-Ground Cross-cut Saw is manufactured exclusively by this Company, and is protected by two patents, dated Dec. 26, 1882; and we would further say that saws have never before been manufactured in this way, nor substantially in the manner described.

—Mr. Strang has the new postoffice very neatly and conveniently arranged.

—Washburn & Ackort, the Charlevoix foundrymen, have a card in this issue.

—Dr. Chamberlain leaves on a Kansas trip this week in company with Ezra Meech.

—The ladies of the M. E. church give another one of their popular ten cent teas at the church this evening.

—The barn of Charles Stevens, of Marian, nine miles south, was struck by lightning Friday night. A cow was killed.

—L. E. Allen, of this place, is storing a quantity of Layton's mess pork at Charlevoix and East Jordan, to supply dealers in February and March.

—Lumbermen are going into the woods in the Northern Peninsula in large numbers. The cut for this winter is expected to be much larger than last winter.

—M. J. Stockman is in the full enjoyment of a protracted siege of rheumatism. During one day he was the recipient of 241 sure-cure receipts for that trouble.

—D. Sherwood & Co. have a new advertisement in this number. This popular house has one of the most desirable fall and winter stocks of boots and shoes ever brought to Northern Michigan. Call and see them.

—R. Connable & Son [illegible] over 10,000 pounds of fish on [illegible] catch, half being from their [illegible] nets. The indications are that the fall run of fish has commenced and it is to be hoped it will be a heavy one.—[illegible]

—The Elk Rapids Iron Co. have a new ad next week.

—The heads are still rolling into the Postmaster General's big basket.

—Wm. Phelps left Monday to spend a few weeks with relatives at Milton, Vt.

—J. S. Smithson and wife of Chicago, came this morning. They return to-night.

—W. J. Orser has his new tailor shop on Mitchell street, Petoskey, in running order.

—Rosenthal & Son in their advertising space announce great bargains in clothing and underwear.

—At Deer Creek, a mile above South Arm, up the Jordan, there was three inches of snow last week.

—Two-thirds of the old postoffice room, in the SENTINEL building, is for rent. It is one of the best locations in town.

—Special meeting of the K. O. T. M. to-morrow evening at seven o'clock sharp. All members are requested to be present.

—T. F. Nelson, editor of the East Jordan Enterprise, made us a pleasant call yesterday, on his way home from Norwood.

—Mrs. M. J. Stockman, and Mrs. L. E. Allen and daughter left Thursday afternoon for Ohio. Mrs. Stockman visits in Cleveland and Mrs. Allen in Aurora.

—Geo. Walbrook, Antrim Co., dug 110 bushels of potatoes in one day and Henry Petery picked up 100 bushels of them the same day, and they call upon somebody or anybody to beat this record.

—Harry Chamberlain was here Tuesday evening with a good looking young lady from Boyne Falls. If we knew where his other sweetheart lived we would send her a copy of this.—Petoskey Democrat.

—It is enough to make tears roll down the cheeks of a mule to see Jack Kirkpatrick and Morris Stockman limping down the street together, and trying to keep step with their game legs and canes.

—"Ren" Barker, of the Reed City Clarion, is getting tired of carrying dead head subscribers. After January 1 a blacklist will appear in his paper, showing just how much each delinquent owes for his paper.

—The SENTINEL is enabled, by virtue of its large and increasing circulation, to give its advertisers extraordinary benefits. Our circulation has increased over seventy-five in the last three weeks, and is still growing. We will cheerfully show our mailing lists to advertisers.

—An exchange very truly says: No sensible man should get angry because a newspaper man duns him for money. A dun is not an impeachment of a subscribers integrity, but is simply an outcropping of the publisher's necessities. For instance, a thousand men owe a man from one to four dollars each. He has to dun them all in order to pay his expenses. Instead of getting angry and stopping the paper because the publisher asks him for what is honestly due, the subscriber should thank the editor for waiting on him so patiently, and pay up like a man.

—At four o'clock Monday morning, the large frame barn of John Shepton, Jr., was totally destroyed by fire, with most of its contents including 850 bushels of grain, twelve tons of hay, a large amount of straw, and several valuable farming implements. Total loss, $2,000; insurance, $1,000. It was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

—Last Saturday evening the Charlevoix postoffice was formally transferred to Charles J. Strang, the new postmaster, and the mail and appurtenances were removed to the new quarters in Eaton's building. On Thursday, Mr. Darbellay, one of the new Democratic Reform Post office Inspectors, made a thorough examination of the office, and, although one of the "Republican rascals" was about to vacate it, he pronounced everything about the office in satisfactory shape.

—It was after going to press last week that the sad intelligence reached us that Mrs. Margaret O'Neill was dead. Few die leaving behind them more of that feeling among neighbors which is genuine tribute to goodness, than did Mrs. O'Neill. A kind, motherly old lady, with a heart for others' woes, and a gentle recognition for everyone she met; a good mother, a faithful helpmeet. Mrs. O'Neill was 63 years old, and leaves a husband and eight children. The funeral was held at the residence Friday afternoon, Rev. Father Pinus officiating.

—On the 12th inst. Wm. H. Cook and Mrs. Minnie Korthase were married in Wilson township, this county, their homes being in Jordan township, Antrim county and on the next evening a crowd assembled with tin pans, horns, &c, and proceeded to celebrate the event in loud terms. Before they had finished, however, Ralph Davis, one of the celebrators received a 32 calibre revolver ball in his back. He was carried home by the rest of the crowd, which broke up the party. Davis' life is despaired of. The next evening two men of the party visited the (un)happy groom and tendered him a reception "a la mode de Sullivan," leaving him unfit to receive the caresses of his affectionate bride.—Boyne [illegible].

—Take tea at the M. E. church this evening.

—Mr. Wm. Holley, son-in-law of Wm. B. Taylor is very ill.

—R. W. Kane and wife are visiting Mrs. Kane's parents in Ionia.

—Two buildings in this county were struck by lightning Friday night.

—Geo. B. Guyles and Geo. H. VanPelt of Norwood left Thursday for Chicago by rail.

—The schooner Lottie Mason arrived yesterday with a cargo of wheat for the Charlevoix flouring mill.

—The machinery for the flouring mill arrives from Chicago to-day. They expect to have the engine in working order this week.

—A. J. McLeod and wife returned from their visit to southern Michigan and Canada, last Saturday. Mrs. McLeod's health is much improved.

—The alarm of fire last Wednesday afternoon was caused by a defective flue at the residence of John M. Ackert. The fire department was on the ground in a remarkably short time.

—F. J. Meech left for Detroit, Monday, on business connected with the South Arm mill property. Mrs. Chamberlain, who accompanied him will visit her son Robert in Detroit for some weeks.

—In the new Detroit Tribune, Michigan republicans have a newspaper worthy and deserving their hearty support. The daily at ten cents a week and the weekly at $1.00 a year, or only 50c if taken with the SENTINEL, place these publications within reach of all.

—Within the past month the SENTINEL has added a number of hundred dollars to its plant, and at present has two large orders of metal and wood type on the way. In this connection a hint that subscribers who are in arrears will make us happy by cashing up, will no doubt be sufficient.

—In the first place, the statement in the East Jordan Enterprise to the effect that there were 12 vacant houses on one street in Charlevoix is a consummate lie. In the second place Charlevoix has not 11 unoccupied business houses as East Jordan has. And again not many years ago "Smith says" that the biggest and most notorious liar in Leelanaw county lived in Northport, and fourthly the territory that now claims him as chief liar includes Charlevoix county with Leelanaw.

—It is about six of one and half a dozen of the other as to which can tell the biggest fish stories, Ben Davis of the Progress, or Cooper of the Tribune, but, outside of fish stories Cooper appears to be ahead, although when he has an especially tough yarn to tell he charges it to a correspondent who writes that "Mrs. Barney Clapper, of this township, dug recently 10 bushels of potatoes, picked them up and made 'her man' a shirt before retiring for the day. She stands ready to make oath before any court of competent jurisdiction and our village constable that the above is not only true but that she can cut four cords of 18 inch wood in one day. Fair, golden haired maidens, take a back seat.—Traverse Eagle.

—Northwestern Lumberman: The eastern Michigan man sat by the editor's desk and chatted pleasantly. For a wonder, although he sees a saw-log when he sees one, he did not chose to talk much about the lumber business. Evidently he has a nose for political news, for he fell to speculating as to who will be the next Michigan Senator. "I almost think," he said, "that lightning will this time strike Stockbridge, of Kalamazoo, but I hope the bolt will be hurled upon the head of Perry Hannah, of Traverse City. Hannah is a representative man, and would honor the State. He went to Traverse City in 1851 with about $200 in his pocket, and to-day he is probably a millionaire. I don't speak of this, though, as qualifying for Senator. He is a first-class man in every respect. If he had his way the civil service reform would be worked for all there is in it. You know he is not only one of Michigan's leading lumbermen, but one of her leading merchants as well. In his store the man who deserves to be promoted steps right up in the class. He is not a man either, who thinks he knows everything. In a business way he can receive suggestions from his employes. He is a fair speaker, and a man with a sound head and broad views. But he got rather taken in last summer when he invited the press association to Traverse City. He thought, I suppose, there would be about 100 of the boys, but they came 700 strong. They literally overran the town. His hotel wouldn't begin to hold them, for it was about full of summer boarders anyway, so they were spread around; some of them slept in private houses, and some of them on his boats, I think. Everything was as free as water. His three steamers were placed at the command of the visitors, and if they wanted anything from his store they had it without price. The escape cost him $3,500, and I wouldn't wonder a bit if he was glad when the mob left." Assuring the gentleman that the Lumberman would vote every time for Mr. Hannah if it only had a chance, he [illegible] his grip and hurried off.

Another Transfer.

C. W. Waldron who recently purchased one half of the Tourists Home at Bay Springs of Mr. R. E. Wilber, has just bought the latter gentlemans half in the hotel and 700 acres adjoining, and now has entire possession.

Mr. Waldron will clear the land and next summer will endeavor to place the hotel property on a paying basis. If he does not succeed it will not be from either lack of capital or energy.

M. E. Church Notes.

M. E. church next Sabbath, preaching in the morning. Mrs. M. M. Johnson will speak at night.

Young People's Vesper service at 6 o'clock.

Song service Saturday evening at 7 o'clock.

Young people's meeting Tuesday evening next week, at the M. E. Church, at which "King Alcohol" will be discussed. The young people have started a weekly paper, to be read Tuesday evenings. Editors, W. B. Stover and Miss Cochran.

Historical Society.

Friday evening Nov. 6th, with President E. H. Green presiding, the Historical Society enjoyed the hospitality of L. E. Allen. A large number were out in spite of the inclement weather.

Mrs. Ella Smith opened the programme with one of her pleasing piano solos, followed with a select reading by W. A. Brown, entitled "Pyramus and Thisbe," from "Saxe" and contained considerable humor as well as a moral plain.

Dr. J. A. Carlstein and A. D. Bradbeer then tendered a vocal duett, entitled "What are the wild waves saying."

Miss Flora Nelson after intermission gave an interesting reading selected from Byron's Poems.

Dr. J. A. Carlstein as speaker of the evening, held the attention of the audience in his usual happy manner for one hour and twenty minutes, following the hero of his sketch (Napoleon) from boyhood to the Battle of Marengo.

The Dr. has promised to continue this subject in the near future, which will be pleasing to those who have heard him.

Mrs. E. M. Clark, Mrs. A. F. Draper and Miss Kanagy closed the exercises with another one of their beautiful vocal trios.

The Society meets this week with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brown. Paper by Mrs. O. D. Wood, subject, "Joan of Arc."

The old capital square at Lansing has been sold for $17,700.

Editor Stead and Mrs. Jarrett have been found guilty in the Armstrong abduction case.

The Mancelona furnace will not remain in blast this winter, it is thought. Fifteen thousand cords of wood will be bought though.

Editor Slossar, of the Mancelona Herald, who confesses that he can distribute six columns of pi and set six columns of straight matter in six hours, with the aid of a boy, has purchased a bicicle, and it is possible that he will make a journey from ocean to ocean in six days, by the watch.—Evening Journal.

Ohio is no longer an "October State." The official vote on the constitutional amendments at the elections held October 13 has been canvassed. They were all declared carried by a proclamation issued subsequently by the Governor. The effect will be to change the time of holding the Ohio State elections from October to November and to cause the Boards of Township Trustees to be elected for three years instead of one year.

After mature deliberation, Gov. Alger has determined not to accept a renomination. When his present term of office expires he will retire from the executive chair and devote his attention wholly to his private affairs. The determination of the Governor to retire from public life may be considered authoritative and final. There is little doubt but that Cyrus G. Luce of Coldwater will be the next Governor of Michigan, and it is a pronounced probability, which we hope to see hatch into a certainty, that Perry Hannah will be the next U. S. Senator.

John McCullough, the actor, died at his Philadelphia residence Sunday afternoon. Mr. McCullough's death, although not entirely unexpected, occurred quite suddenly, and was due, as Dr. Hugo Engel, his physician, says, to "an affection of the brain caused by blood poisoning." Dr. Engel asserts that McCullough was not insane, and that it was a mistake to have placed him in Bloomingdale asylum where he was confined for a number of weeks. His failing mental powers were [illegible] in the early part of January, [illegible], and April of that year he made a lamentable failure of "Othello" in Washington. In Chicago he appeared for the last time in his life on Sept. 29, 1884, in the character of Spartacus in "The Gladiator." His condition that night was so bad that the curtain was rung down at the end of the second act.

An attempt was made on the 28th of September, 1883, to rob an express car near Coolidge, Kan., the engineer being killed. No clue was obtained to the perpetrators of the deed until recently, when Henry Kellon, in jail at Jefferson, Mo., confessed that he and Abe Walter and Fred Blunk committed the crime. All of the gang were arrested and placed in prison at Topeka, Kan., on the 28th.

Large discrepancies were discovered on the 28th in the accounts of the lately retired officers at Bozeman, M. T. The Sheriff was short $1,000; the Treasurer about $10,000, while the Commissioners were behind $25,000 in uncertified bills.

A bridge sidewalk over the river at East Saginaw, Mich., broke on the 28th, and nearly one hundred persons were precipitated into the water. It was feared that thirteen lives were lost.

The total number of hogs up to the 28th packed this season in the West was 295,000, against 195,000 for a corresponding period last year.

At Augusta, Ga., the wholesale and retail grocery business having been monopolized by Chinamen, the citizens were on the 28th petitioning the council to devise means to stop the yellow tide of immigration.

Gypsy counterfeiters were caught in the Cherokee Nation near Fort Smith, Ark., on the 28th. They had large quantities of spurious money in their possession.

The two-year-old son of Hon. R. R. Greer, of Lanesboro Minn., perished recently in a burning barn belonging to his father.

Information was received on the 29th by General Miles, commanding the Department of the Missouri, with headquarters at Fort Leavenworth that about four thousand well armed and equipped men were on their way to Oklahoma under the leadership of Captain Couch. These new boomers announced their intention to stay and fight, if necessary, for possession of the coveted lands.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

A dispatch of the 27th from General de Courcy, the French Commander in Tonquin, stated that General Negrier had again defeated the Black Flags, driving them to the northwest with heavy losses.

A recent storm reported off the Labrador coast is stated to have wrecked twenty vessels, and one hundred lives were lost. Nearly two thousand shipwrecked persons were on the shore in a destitute condition.

The concentration of troops continued in Turkey on the 27th at points available for operations in Eastern Roumelia.

The last rail was laid on the Canadian Pacific Railway on the 27th, and through trains would soon be running from Winnipeg to Montreal.

The report that a revolution had broken out in Mandalay and that King Theebaw had been murdered proved on the 28th to be unfounded.

Officials of Turkey reported on the 28th the presence of 180,000 soldiers at points on the frontier where they were available for active service on the Balkan peninsula.

At a public auction in London on the 28th the Great Eastern, the largest steamship in the world, was sold for £26,200.

Jesse W. Jones, aged sixteen, who robbed two stage-coaches, was recently sentenced at Graham, Tex., to ten years in the Chester (Ill.) Penitentiary.

There were two hundred cases of cholera and forty-three deaths in Laredo, Spain, during the seven days ended on the 30th ult.

There were 191 business failures in the United States and Canada during the seven days ended in the 30th, ult., against 170 the previous seven days. The distribution was as follows: Middle States, 39; New England States, 20; Western, 48; Southern, 30; Pacific States and Territories, 24; Canada, 21.

Three inches of snow fell on the 30th ult. in the Province of Quebec.

A rain-storm of eighteen hours' duration had on the 30th ult. caused floods in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, more water falling than in the two previous years. Near Lexington a trestle collapsed under a train, the engineer and fireman being killed, but the passengers escaped. The rivers were rising rapidly, and merchants on the water-front at Richmond were moving out.

FISH ON WARD.

The Ex-President of the Marine Bank on the Witness Stand—His Account of How He Became the Dupe of Ferdinand Ward—The Latter's Cowardly Appeal for Mercy at the Hands of the Friend He Had Defrauded.

New York, Oct. 28.—The jury in the Ward case was completed Monday afternoon. District-Attorney Martin opened the case. He said that Ward had been indicted for larceny, and read the statutes covering the crime.

James D. Fish was the first witness called. He leaned over in his chair and glanced savagely at Ward, who lowered his eyes. Ward's counsel moved that the jury be dismissed on account of the statement of the District Attorney regarding General Grant and Mr. Fish. The motion was denied. Mr. Fish said:

I am sixty-six years old and a convict at Auburn State Prison, to which I was sentenced for ten years at hard labor. I saw the check handed to me on May 5, 1884. It was handed me by the paying teller. I directed it certified after I went to the telephone and rang up Ward.

Question—Is the prisoner here the Ward you mean?

Mr. Fish (leaning over again)—I would like to see him. Yes, that is the man (contemptuously).

Continuing, the witness said:

I said over the telephone "Ward, I have your check here for certification for $71,000 against an uncertified check for $75,000. Ward telephoned back that it was all right, and I certified it. I saw Ward on May 5 about nine o'clock. He came in Monday morning before business hours and asked for the withdrawal of a certified $80,000 check, but an $81,000, against which the former sum had been drawn, had been withdrawn. Mr. John H. Carr, the receiving teller, was present, and I instructed him to withdraw the check. When the exchanges came in, I saw that the $80,000 check which Ward said had been drawn was presented and paid by the bank. I rang Ward up and told him. He said it was strange, but that it would be all right; he was too busy to come and see me then.

On cross-examination, the witness said he did not know that Ward's account had been overdrawn on May 5, 1884, to the amount of $100,000. He added:

I knew that Ward often had his personal account overdrawn, but Ward told me that the money was deposited in the Grant & Ward account. On April 12, 1884, I told Ward that it seemed to me that now affairs were drifting in a way I could not understand. Mr. Carr, the second teller, had charge of the cash account. On May 5 I expected Ward all day, according to his written promise, to make a deposit to relieve the $81,000, which did come in, though he assured me that it was withdrawn. We waited for Ward at the bank that day until five o'clock. Ward had promised to raise the money, and I understood that he was trying to borrow it on the 5th of May. I was pressing him hard for money, as the bank needed it in order to get through the clearing-house on that Monday morning. On May 2 I wrote Ward; "Go to all you can and hope to see better days." I meant him to get all the money he could, and on Monday morning he deposited the Vanderbilt check for $150,000, which was credited to his personal account. I do not know that at that time it was extra hard for Ward to borrow money on the securities he had. I believed Ward to be an honorable, truthful man; one to whom I trusted everything I had in the world. On Monday, May 5, I expected Ward to raise a large amount of money—as much as $400,000 or $500,000. He had been trying to raise money for ten days before that.

New York, Oct. 28.—Mr. Fish was on the stand nearly all of yesterday testifying as to the plundering of the Marine Bank and General Grant. An important fact brought out was that at the time the alleged fraudulent check for $71,000 on the First National Bank was deposited in the Marine Bank Ward had only $2,200 in the former institution. That Grant & Ward's account at the Marine Bank was overdrawn $22,545 on the evening of May 3, 1884, was another important part of the testimony. Mr. Fish testified as follows:

On May 5 I had no doubt that we could have gotten relief from other banks had the Government contracts been true, as I believed them to be. A refusal to certify Grant & Ward's checks would have caused rumors which would have broken them up, and then our bank would have been forced down. I am now staying at the Murray Hill Hotel, and I believe the District Attorney resides there also. We have had frequent talks together, but not much about this case.

On his re-direct examination, Mr. Fish said:

I knew of Ward in 1876, and was personally acquainted with him in the summer of 1877. On January 1, 1882, I was associated in business with him in the affairs of Grant & Ward, the latter alone managing the business. In January or February, 1882, there was a change in the relations between the Marine Bank and the firm of Grant & Ward. Mr. Ward told me then that the business of Grant & Ward would be changed; that they would give up the stock business, and through the influence of General Grant, Senator Chaffee and S. B. Elkins they had been offered Government contracts for corn, hay, feed, etc., and that if General Grant received the nomination for the Presidency the business would be more lucrative.

Ward's counsel moved to strike out all about General Grant. "It was my hope," said the counsel, "that the dead hero's name would not be dragged into the case, and that he would be allowed to rest quietly in his grave."

"I have had enough of that," said Judge Barrett; "the name you mentioned is not besmirched at all, and the evidence given is competent."

Mr. Fish continued:

While in Cuba in February, 1882, I received a letter from Ward stating that he had procured Government orders on which he hoped to make a profit of $170,000, but that he did not wish it to be known, as it might injure the prospects of the General in securing his pension, and then he would not act with the firm. In order to raise money to fill these so-called orders notes were made by Grant & Ward and indorsed by me and discounted at the Marine Bank or other places. Ward told me the money was used to buy beef, corn, wheat, etc., with which to supply the Government with its orders as given. The special account of Grant & Ward kept at the bank related only to Government accounts, Ward stating that the business would be so large that it would be as well not to mix up the moneys received from it with the general account of the firm. I received a letter dated March 5, 1882 from Ward, stating that he would need the money to supply the Government with a large number of bushels of oats for out of town stations.

Fish testified that the last time he saw Ward was three or four days after the failure. He said:

Ward came to me and wanted to make an explanation about the failure, and said that he couldn't help it. I said to him that by his treachery and deception he had ruined me, my family, the bank and the reputation I had been building up for years. I raised a chair over his head and said that if he was not such a disgraceful, sneaking villain and reptile, I'd kill him on the spot. He crouched on the floor like a whipped puppy and begged me to spare his life. I used the strongest language I could. He was more crouching than ever as he sits now. I told him he had better kill himself so the world would be rid of his presence.

While Fish delivered himself of these scathing remarks Ward's face flushed, and he did not look up at the old man who was denouncing him so bitterly. The rest of Fish's testimony was of a routine nature.

—A good horse story comes from the frontier station of Vreenhoven, Belgium. As a horse and cart, apparently with a load of hay, were about to pass the custom-house, the animal suddenly stopped, and would not budge an inch. Two customs officers came up to lend a hand, whereupon the driver took to his heels. It turned out that the hay concealed about seven hundred and fifty kilos of Dutch tobacco. Conscientiousness must now be added to the other good qualities of the horse.—N. Y. Herald.

DEADLY REVENGE.

Two Young Ladies in Chicago Procure the Discharge of a Fellow-Employe Who Had Slandered Them—He Lays in Wait and Fatally Shoots Both—A Narrow Escape from Lynching by an Excited Mob.

Chicago, Oct. 29.—Aston J. Burrus shot and mortally wounded Lillian Walter and Mrs. Rey Good at 5:30 o'clock last evening, near the doorway of 140 and 142 Monroe street. The murderer fired but two shots. Each of the women was shot in the right side of the head, and both fell almost immediately. It is not thought either can recover.

Mrs. Good is twenty-six years of age, and Miss Walter, twenty-four. Both are handsome women. The former is separated from her husband. They, together with their assailant, have been engaged in the office of R. G. Dun & Co., the ladies as type-writers and Burrus as "dictator." The latter is married and has one child.

About six months ago Burrus quarreled with Mrs. Good and Miss Walter in the office of the firm and talked so vilely about them that he was reprimanded by the chief clerk, Stanley Prudence. Mr. Prudence warned him not to repeat the offense. Last Wednesday Burrus quarreled with a young man in the office, and Burrus was taunted with having quarreled with women. This led him to again use vile names in speaking of Mrs. Good and Miss Walter. They reported him to Prudence, and as Burrus refused to apologize he was discharged.

Burrus came to the office last evening and waited on the street in front of the building until Mrs. Good and Miss Walter appeared. With a quick motion Burrus turned and drew from his pocket a revolver. The polished barrel paused in the air but an instant. There was the dull report, a smothered scream, and Mrs. Good fell to the sidewalk. Half turning quickly, and unmoved by the shrieks of the women and the rush of excited men, Burrus leveled his smoking weapon at the head of Lillian Walter. The muzzle nearly touched her face, and as the trigger fell a ball went crashing into her skull. She did not fall at once, but ran screaming down the sidewalk with blood spurting from the powder-burned wound in the side of her face. During the excitement Burrus darted to the middle of the street and dashed west toward La Salle street. In his hand he still held the revolver. An excited crowd started in pursuit. Burrus was fleet of foot and outstripped all but a few of his pursuers. After a long chase he was finally captured by Officer Crowley. The angry crowd surged around the man. The policeman, holding his prisoner with a firm grasp, literally fought his way to the patrol-box at the corner of Madison street and Fifth avenue. Men clutched at the cowering murderer and struck at him on the way. At the patrol-box, while waiting for the wagon, the crowd nearly took Burrus from the officer. Desperate efforts were made to lynch the prisoner, but the valiant officer successfully resisted all attempts until the arrival of the patrol wagon, when he was taken to the station and locked up.

In the meantime the wounded women were placed under the care of physicians. Both were unconscious. The bullet had entered Mrs. Good's head almost in the center of the right ear. Miss Walter's wound was a little below the right temple. Both were taken to the hospital, the former in an unconscious condition. At the hospital Mrs. Good's wound was probed successfully and the ball was removed. It was found at the base of the brain. The attending physician says there is little hope of her recovery. Miss Walter's wound has also been probed, but the ball can not be found. Her neck and face are swollen frightfully and inflammation has already set in. The physicians have little hope of her recovery.

WARD FOUND GUILTY.

Verdict of the Jury in This Celebrated Case—A Motion for a New Trial Made, and Sentence Deferred.

New York, Oct. 29.—Ferdinand Ward, the bad partner of the Grants, has been found guilty under the second count of the indictment under which he was tried, which charged him with obtaining a certified check from the Marine Bank by false representations. The verdict of the jury was returned shortly after midnight last night. There was a motion for a new trial, and sentence was deferred.

After two or three other witnesses had been heard, the defense announced the close of their case. The Judge charged the jury, and that body retired. Once or twice during the night they returned for further instruction, and about 12:30 they came in and stated that a verdict had been reached. The roll was again called, and Foreman Hunteon was asked the question: "What say you, guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty," came the answer, not loud, but in the great stillness which prevailed in the court-room it was heard by everybody, and by none quicker than Ward, who sat alone. A slight clutching of the hands and a convulsive gulp at the throat, very characteristic of the man, were the only signs that he was at all affected.

Out of the box the jurymen talked freely. On going out they stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal. The rest soon came over to the majority. As the jury came from the box to receive the congratulations of those in the court-room a detective touched Ward on the shoulder and motioned him to come along. He did so without question, and in a few minutes was on his way up Center street to the Tombs—a convicted felon.

The crime charged was grand larceny, a felony and on this the verdict was founded. The punishment provided by the code is confinement in the State Prison at hard labor for not less than five nor more than ten years. The careful rulings of Judge Barrett led those who watched the case to believe that there will be no new trial, and that with the close of the week Ward will face sentence.

One More Chance for Riel.

Montreal, Canada, Oct. 29.—The Cabinet decided yesterday to grant the petition for a commission to examine into Louis Riel's sanity, upon receipt of affidavits showing his insanity at the different periods when he was confined in the insane asylum here and at Quebec. The commission will be composed of one English physician from this city, presumably Dr. J. Edwards, one French physician from Quebec, and one from the United States, believed to be one of the leading experts who testified for the defense in the Guiteau case.

—Sin makes more sleepless nights than sorrow or pain. There are thousands who can not sleep because they have filled their pillows with thorns. They are reaping the whirlwind even while they sow the wind. God pity all such sleepless souls, for they need His pity most. Happy are we who know the luxury of sleep! We will bless God for his manifold gifts, for life and health, for home and friends, for sunshine and stars, for flowers and children, and we will not forget to bless him for his priceless benediction of sleep.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

—A scientific authority says that it is perfectly impossible to get the hands clean; that "after the most diligent washings and brushings with soap and water and rinsing with carbolic acid and other disinfectants the hands remain so impure that upon touching the fingers to sterilized gelatine micro-organisms are suddenly developed." Many persons apparently have been aware of this fact a long time, and having become discouraged in the endeavor to keep their hands clean, abandoned the job in despair years ago.—Norristown Herald.

DISASTROUS STORMS.

Seventy Vessels Wrecked and Three Hundred Lives Lost on the Labrador Coast—Great Distress Among the Families of Fishermen—Many Dying of Exposure and Hunger.

St. Johns, N. B., Oct. 29.—The bark Nellie, one of the relief vessels sent out to the Labrador coast, came into port yesterday almost overladen with men, women and children, many of whom are still prostrated. There were 260 in all, but it is feared that a large number of the rescued can not survive.

News from the scene of the disaster is meager. There is no telegraph communication, and nothing further can be heard until another of the five steamers which have been dispatched returns. The officers of the Nellie report that the hurricane was the most severe ever experienced on the Labrador coast. Over seventy vessels were wrecked. Some were dashed to pieces on reefs far distant from shore and everybody on board lost. Others were dismantled by the gale, and survivors clung to the floating rigging and hulls until the storm subsided, when they were rescued by coast wreckers. The great majority of the ill-fated cruisers, however, were lifted up as if on the swell of a tidal wave, and, no longer susceptible to the skill of human hands, taken with a mighty low to a lodgement in the surf, when the breakers completed the work of destruction.

It is impossible to tell how many persons are lost. The present estimate is three hundred, but this does not include the probable hundreds who will die from exposure and inattention. There are more than two thousand sufferers scattered along the bleak coast for miles. They are destitute of everything—food, fuel and clothing—and unless aid soon reaches them they must nearly all perish.

Quebec, Canada, Oct. 29.—The steamship Canadian, which has just returned from her season's cruise in the gulf, reports considerable distress on the Labrador coast owing to the failure of the fisheries. At Esquimaux point, out of a population of 150 families only twenty have supplies for the winter. Thirty more hope to get enough from the merchants, who usually make advances to them, to pull them through. The remaining one hundred families have nothing whatever with which to face the winter. The failure of the fisheries was due to the action of the ice in the spring. The fall fishing has been poor all over the gulf, owing to rough weather. Four destitute families were brought from Labrador by the Canadian. These have been cared for and sent West.

MANY LIVES LOST.

The Fall of a Bridge at East Saginaw, Mich., Hurls Sixty Persons Into a River—A Dozen Missing.

East Saginaw, Mich., Oct. 29.—Fire broke out on the tug McDonald, lying about one hundred feet south of the Genesee avenue bridge, last evening, and a large number of people collected on the bridge to watch the sight. Suddenly a piece of sidewalk on the bridge, five feet wide and forty-five feet long, on which about sixty people were standing, gave way with a crash and precipitated them into the river.

The water there is fifteen to eighteen feet deep and flows with a strong current. The night was cloudy and dark. Miraculously the greater number were saved, although many were badly bruised. Twelve or thirteen are missing, and it is feared they are drowned. The river is now being dragged, and the body of one boy, named Sidney Fallon, aged eight years, has been brought up.

James Twaits was rescued badly hurt. John Rothenburg was injured about the legs, and George A. Irwin was slightly injured. E. D. Cowles, managing editor of the Courier, was standing on the extreme farther point of the bridge when it went down. He could not swim a stroke, and was dragged by the struggling people to the bottom of the river twice, but got clear, and, drifting down stream, clung to a spile until rescued, sustaining slight injuries. The only names of those said to be missing yet given are John Rush, Chester Meeres, James Murphy and —— Sharp, a boy. The darkness at the time of the disaster and the fact that those who were rescued were hurried to their homes, make it impossible to tell how many have been lost. It is believed that some bodies have been carried down stream by the current.

MURDER WILL OUT.

The Participators in the Coolidge (Kan.) Train Robbery and Murder Behind the Bars.

Jefferson, Mo., Oct. 29.—An attempt was made September 28, 1883, to rob the express car on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad near Coolidge, Kan. The engineer of the train was shot and killed by the robbers, and the fireman seriously wounded. All efforts to obtain a clue were fruitless and the matter was almost forgotten. In the latter part of November, 1884, Henry Kellon was sentenced to the penitentiary at this place for four years for horse-stealing. The pastor of Grace Church is chaplain of the penitentiary, and to him Kellon confessed a short time ago that he was one of the Coolidge train-robbers, and that Abe Walter and Fred Blunk were his companions in that crime. The authorities were communicated with, and the arrest of Walter and Blunk was effected. They were lodged in jail at Topeka, Kan. Governor Martin, of Kansas, and the officials of the Santa Fe Road, made a strong appeal to Governor Marmaduke, of Missouri, for the pardon of Kellon, in order that they might use him as a witness. The petition was granted and Kellon was released yesterday. He was immediately rearrested and started for Topeka, Kan., where he will be used as a witness and will also be placed on trial for his part in the crime. His confession was corroborated in all its details before any action was taken, and there is not the slightest doubt but the famous train robbery mystery is solved and that the robbers and murderers will be duly punished.

Monuments on Gettysburg's Gory Field.

Gettysburg, Pa., Oct. 29.—Representatives of the Indiana troops engaged in the battle of Gettysburg arrived here Tuesday night and yesterday morning to dedicate the monuments recently erected on the battlefield. The various historic places on the field were visited yesterday afternoon, and last night the addresses of dedication were delivered in the court-house. The monuments comprise six shafts, varying in height from eight to eighteen feet, and commemorating the Third Cavalry and the Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-seventh, Seventh and Fourteenth Infantry.

Texas Cattle Going West.

Abilene, Tex., Oct. 29.—Thirteen trains, including five loaded at this place, of stock cattle, mostly cows and calves, have passed westward, bound for New Mexico, in the last four days, and more are waiting here for empty cars. Fifteen cars is the average to the train, and at least forty cows and calves to the car. This, therefore, makes about eight thousand head of cattle moved out of Texas on the Texas & Pacific in the last four days. The free-grazers say that this is the result of the lease law, under which the stockmen are obliged to pay a small annual rent for grazing their herds on the public-school lands.

"LITTLE MAC" DEAD.

General George B. McClellan Dies Suddenly of Heart Disease—Proclamations by the President and Secretary of War—Sketch of His Eventful Career.

Orange, N. J., Oct. 30.—General George B. McClellan, ex-Commander of the army of the United States, died suddenly yesterday morning at 3:10 o'clock from exhaustion produced by repeated shocks of neuralgia of the heart, at his home on Orange Mountain, aged fifty-nine years.

Washington, Oct. 30.—At the Cabinet meeting yesterday the death of General McClellan was feelingly alluded to by the President and members of the Cabinet. The following Executive order was issued:

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C., Oct. 29.—The death of George B. McClellan, at one time the Major-General commanding the armies of the United States, took place at an early hour this morning. As a mark of public respect to the memory of this distinguished soldier and citizen, whose military ability and civic virtues have shed luster upon the history of the country, it is ordered by the President that the National flag be displayed at half mast upon all the buildings of the executive departments in this city until after his funeral shall have taken place.

Daniel S. Lamont, Private Secretary.

The following general order was issued yesterday afternoon:

War Department, Washington, D. C., Oct. 29, 1885.—With profound regret the Secretary of War announces to the army the death of General George B. McClellan, formerly Major-General commanding the armies of the United States, which occurred at Orange, N. J., this morning. The name and fame of this distinguished soldier and citizen is known and honored throughout the Republic. As the organizer of the army of the Potomac, he made it capable of accomplishing great deeds. The lessons he gave it were never forgotten, and the spirit with which he animated it continued through all its eventful history. Subsequently, as its leader, he rendered great services to his country. His pure and noble character, his unselfish devotion, and the duty he performed in the hour of peril will cause his memory ever to be cherished with pride by the people of the United States.

William C. Endicott, Secretary of War.

President Cleveland was profoundly impressed by the news of General McClellan's death. The friendship between the President and General McClellan was close, and was marked by the high opinion which each entertained respecting the other. President Cleveland greatly desired to have McClellan in his Cabinet, and probably preferred him to any other man. McClellan would undoubtedly have been appointed Secretary of War had it not been for the vigorous opposition of the New Jersey Democratic leaders, who labored earnestly to convince the President that McClellan's appointment would be a political mistake. The President yielded the point very reluctantly, but he still kept McClellan in mind, and when he had an opportunity offered him the Russian mission. This McClellan declined. Within the past twenty-four hours the President had determined to ask General McClellan to take the place of Dorman B. Eaton on the Civil-Service Commission. He intended to send his request to McClellan to-day.

The announcement of McClellan's death fell on the President's mind with the shock of a surprise, for he had not known that the General was at all unwell. His dispatch of condolence to Mrs. McClellan was written the instant he heard the news. The autographic original will be sent to Mrs. McClellan. It is as follows:

Washington, Oct. 29, 1885.—To Mrs. George B. McClellan, Orange, N. J.—I am shocked by the news of your husband's death, and, while I know how futile are all human efforts to console, I must assure you of my deep sympathy in your great grief and express to you my own sense of affliction at the loss of so good a friend.

Grover Cleveland.

George Brinton McClellan was born in Philadelphia, December 3, 1826. He was educated at West Point, and graduated in 1846. He served in the Mexican war as a Lieutenant of Engineers, where he was breveted as Captain for meritorious service. In 1855, he was appointed one of a commission of three officers to go to Europe and observe the military systems of the European powers. His report on the subject, especially of his observations in the Crimean war, was an able and useful work. He resigned in 1857, and was appointed Engineer-in-Chief of the Illinois Central Railroad. While engaged in this duty he made Chicago his place of residence. In 1861 he was made President of the St. Louis & Cincinnati Railroad Company, but in 1861, on the breaking out of the war, he again entered the army, and achieved a number of victories over the rebel forces in West Virginia.

A few days after the battle of Bull Run—July 21, 1861—he was appointed, at the recommendation of General Winfield Scott, to the commandership of the army at Washington, and, when General Scott retired from active service three months later, he was made Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States. About the end of January, 1862, President Lincoln gave orders for a general movement of all the armies, which was to be made February 22. McClellan had meantime been relieved of the command of all the departments except that of the Army of the Potomac. With this force he began, about March 10, to move toward Richmond, conveying his army by water down the Potomac and Chesapeake Bay to the James River. Soon after the opening of this campaign he began to complain that he was not properly supported by the President. Nevertheless, he began active operations about the 5th of April, besieging Yorktown. At the end of a month, when his batteries were ready to open on the fort, the enemy quietly stole away, falling back to Richmond. McClellan followed slowly and took up a position on the Chickahominy, a small stream flowing near the Confederate capital. During this advance on the retreating enemy he fought the indecisive battle of Williamsburg, which enabled General J. E. Johnson, the rebel commander, to get his supply trains off to Richmond.

While encamped near Richmond McClellan's army remained there weeks almost inactive in the swamps of the Chickahominy, and many soldiers were lost through sickness. Active hostilities were renewed by the enemy June 26, and then began the seven days battles of Mechanicsville, Savage's Station, White Oak Swamp, Gaines' Mill and Malvern Hill (July 1, 1862)—the result of which was that the Union forces were compelled to retreat and abandon the conquest of Richmond.

Meanwhile General Halleck had been made General-in-Chief of the army, and he ordered McClellan to return with his whole force to Fortress Monroe. The scattered troops in Northern Virginia had been united under General Pope. General Lee assailed these successfully September 1, 1862—the second battle of Bull Run.

After Pope's failure he was again called to the command of the Army of the Potomac, and defeated General Lee at the battle of Antietam, September 17, 1862. He was again relieved of command on the 5th of November following, and was not recalled to the service. He resigned his Major Generalship in the regular army in 1864, and General Sheridan was promoted to fill the vacancy.

After this General McClellan took no further part in the war. In August, 1864, he was the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, but received only twenty-one electoral votes, the remaining 212 being cast for Abraham Lincoln. Of the popular vote, however, Lincoln received about 2,200,000, and McClellan about 1,800,000.

He traveled in Europe from 1864 to 1868, and then became a resident of New York City, and held the office of Superintendent of Docks and Piers. By the will of Edwin A. Stevens he was also made Superintendent of the Stevens Floating Battery, which proved a complete failure. He afterward removed to Orange Mountain, N. J., and was elected Governor of that State in 1877. He has not since appeared in public life.

Will Rest at Riverside.

New York, Oct. 30.—Mayor Grace recently wrote to Mrs. Grant asking that she and her family give a clear and emphatic expression of their wish as to where the body of General Grant should rest permanently, because the Memorial Committee was kept in doubt by the rumors that Congress will be asked to have the body removed to Washington. Yesterday Mrs. Grant wrote to Mayor Grace. She and her family selected Riverside Park because they intended always to live near it, and New York was chosen because she believed it to be the General's preference. The Memorial Committee is now satisfied that Congress will not meddle with the matter.

Oklahoma Again Invaded.

Leavenworth, Kan., Oct. 30.—General Miles, commanding the Department of the Missouri, with headquarters at Fort Leavenworth, received official information yesterday afternoon that about four thousand well-armed and equipped men are on their way to Oklahoma territory, under the leadership of Captain Couch, and announce their determination to stay and fight, if necessary, for possession of the land. Captain Couch has organized a staff and the main body of the boomers are marching with military precision and determination. They expect to occupy the lands and hold them until Congress declares them open for settlement.

SLEEPING BESSIE.

Lightly tread we come to peep
At the little maiden asleep.
Let your steps the carpet cross
Soft as sunshine over moss,
Lest her dream should suffer loss.

Hushed the baby lies, so late
Entered through the crystal gate
That [illegible] calm and holy grace,
Borrowed from some blessed place,
Shineth still within her face.

Lashes fall in slumber meek,
Fringe with gold a tender cheek,
Tinted like the dewy sprays
Of the blossoms' [illegible], whose praise
Floods the robin's roundelays.

And as if a white [illegible] tree
Dropt its dauntless petal, see
How the dimpled hand gleams fair
Through the ripples of her hair,
Clasped by angels unaware.

Who shall sing her cradle song?
Silver streams would do her wrong;
Whispering leaves are over rude,
And the twitter in the wood
From the linnet's nestling brood.

Flowers we shed, in lieu of speech,
With a [illegible] in each,
Culled at dawn from emerald dells,
Where the wild bee longest dwells,
Cradled deep in honey bells.

Strew the sweets above her rest,
Only hearts-ease on the breast,
By our potent sylvan art
Charming thus the budding heart
From all thorny sting and smart.

On the blue eyes, curtained fast,
Blue forget-me-nots we cast.
Mayflowers pink we scatter free
[illegible]
Fragrant may their heralding be!

Last of all are lilies given,
That the maiden soul to Heaven
May uplift its chalice white,
Where the teardrops of the night
Turn to pearls with dawning light.

Stay, [illegible]
[illegible] bless our benison.
Deepest love is purest prayer,
Mounting high the starry stair
To the Love beyond compare.

See! she stirs. The dimple dips
All [illegible] the drowsy lips.
Bonny dreams blue eyes beguile,
Not a [illegible] but mother's smile
Should be waking [illegible]

JACK AND JILL.

How They Went Up the Hill of Life Together.

It was too funny for anything, but we were married. It didn't concern the world in the least, but it was a matter of no small moment to Jack and myself, as we came out of the little box of a parsonage, that we were actually man and wife. Dr. Pitcher, the Lutheran dominie, eyed us sharply as he came into the cozy study. How well I remember that morning! the sunshine fell across the window garden, with its fragrant flowers, and made a golden spot on the carpet just at Jack's feet. In front of me was a Beatrice di Cenci, after Guido, on the wall, and the sad, pathetic face haunts me yet. It almost seemed to speak to us, saying: "Children, you are so foolish!" Dr. Pitcher evidently thought so, too, for he was a bachelor, and questioned Jack quite a while; but Jack was manly and frank, and he had a letter of introduction from good old Dr. Clark, who had known him from a boy, and so our dominie was satisfied.

It was very solemn, after all, the serving man and maid came in as witnesses, and I nudged Jack as they looked at us in astonishment, as much as to say: "What do these children want to commit such foolishness for?" But we answered the questions, we took each other's hand, the good doctor [illegible] tenderly, as if his own past [illegible] his words, and we went out into the sunshine, past the gray church, once to climb the hill of life together.

Jack [illegible] me in the shadow of the Tower, although I told him he shouldn't on the public street, and we turned our faces toward home. Jack was twenty and I was sixteen; no wonder you grow solemn and shake your heads, you older ones, but I believe the young folks will envy us now, but not [illegible], perhaps, for life is a tough thing, and the hill for Jack and Jill was no exception. But we commenced to climb with light hearts, we were strong and young, and we loved each other "till death do us part" did not seem a very hard thing to answer from the doctor's lips.

We had our rooms to ourselves—a little bird-house of a tenement—kitchen, parlor and two bed-rooms; yet what in the world we wanted of an extra bed-room one could hardly tell, as we were both orphans in this Western city, far away from any one we knew.

We were alone in the world, we loved each other, why not climb the steep hand in hand? Jack worked in a great flouring mill; his day began at seven and closed at six: what nice long evenings we had to study and read and dream! To be sure, Jack had only forty dollars a month, and we had many a [illegible] in addition and subtraction to do to keep out of debt, but he said I didn't [illegible] poor, and my Dutch ancestors certainly would not have been ashamed of me in that regard. I was accustomed to take my hair down at night to please him—it was blonde, the color of [illegible], and he called me "The Mermaid," so covered was I by the meshes of light. I was just a little proud of my hair, like a silly child, and used to tell Jack jokingly: "If worst came to worst, I could sell that for bread." One evening our landlord came in just as I had allowed the last coil to fall. He inquired of Jack if I was a younger sister. "My wife, Mr. Lane," said Jack, smiling. I thought it too bad that I looked so young, but my cheeks would be red, and I was plump as a partridge.

But that first year sobered us a little; we found Fate was no sentimentalist, and hard facts must be faced and conquered, if possible. I looked after the house, did the marketing, and planned to see how far twenty dollars a month would go in providing our food. The first month I spent thirty, which made Jack look sober, but the next I did better, until, finally, I was able with ease to do what I desired. Jack and I were determined to lay by something if we went hungry; we had dreams for the future, which we hardly breathed to each other. Of course we did not live in a very ample style, pastry and cake were not always on our table. I kept at a few things until I could do them well. Jack was patient, [illegible] a good cook book, was blessed with common sense, and kept bravely [illegible].

Perhaps you are quite tired of this [illegible], but Jack and I lived it all, with [illegible] faith in God and each other. We had but little, but from that little we extracted every ounce of happiness. [illegible] a small library from my father, and when the curtains were dropped, the stand drawn out, and the lamp lighted—our "student," the one luxury we indulged in—the little kitchen was not a place to be despised by people like us. We read aloud in turn, a dictionary on the table for reference, and [illegible] in one volume, which we prized very highly. We found the reading aloud a good exercise, and we acquired valuable information. We went through Macaulay in this way—his essays and history, some of the British dramatists contemporary with Shakspeare, particular delighting in Christopher Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus," Homer's "Iliad," in Bryant's translation, Mommsen's "History of Rome." Oh, we were very literary, Jack and I, that first winter! We had some hot discussions relative to the merits of the old English authors, and then, with all, we took German. We could do the grammar about our work, there were many Germans in the mill, and we did get on quite a little in that throat distorting language.

You think it was all sunshine; if it had been, I should not be telling this story to you. You hope Jack never broke his crown, "but he did, all the same—me," as a little sprite at my elbow says about her playthings. Love, thank God, can last not only until death, but beyond, but the rainy days are quite necessary in the journey to make us thankful for the sunshine, if for nothing more. We were to have our share of dark days, but no one could take away from us the happy remembrances of that year of work and pleasure.

One night Jack came home in high spirits, the mill would stop a day for repairs. "Jill, we can have a holiday, and we will have a lark." Our first day together since we came out of the little parsonage, how pleased we were, like two children let loose from school! We arose the next morning with the sun, we did the work together, and, arrayed in our best clothes, left our dear little home, with the sunshine flooding the tiny kitchen and "Dick" in his cage singing as if he would split his throat in ecstacy. How happy we were! The people we met all seemed friends, and we danced along like two kittens on a frolic. Jack had proposed that we go to a city twenty miles away and spend the day. We reached the station in good time, and the express in half an hour left us at our destination, and steamed away, hissing like some wild creature mad with fury. The people must have thought us half demented, for we raced about, into the book stores, looking at pictures, pricing fabrics at the great dry goods houses, and altogether behaving shockingly for old, staid married people. But you must remember that Jack had only reached his majority and Jill was but just seventeen. Ah, well, what a red-letter day it was with its autumn glories, the markets full of blushing fruit, a glamour on everything! It seemed to Jack and I an enchanted land, everything was free to us, we could see and enjoy it all. We got our lunch at a little Dutch parlor, with a motherly attendant, who evidently regarded us as two babies who had escaped our parents for a day. She accepted a ridiculously low sum for it all, and her broad, good-natured face smiled all over when we went out. Every moment was just packed full of solid fun; Jack and I were speaking of it yesterday, after returning from Mrs. Lord's fashionable reception, how perfectly happy we were, and how it ended. But I must not anticipate.

In the early dusk, just as the lights began to twinkle along the streets and people were trudging home from their toil, as the West was hung with flame, we were flying out toward the city where we lived; and how glad we were to return, just as eager as we were to leave in the morning; I thought how the kitchen would look, and what I would prepare for tea in honor of our outing.

Well, we were coming into the city, a little tired, but satisfied with our day. We were on the evening express, and it was always a scene of confusion when the train got in, two tracks on either side had their trains, bells were ringing, escaping steam with that hiss and swish that is so deafening. It was quite dark, save as the headlights of the engines glared on us like huge evil eyes; the crowd was great, and one was almost bewildered in the glare and noise. We had found our way out, Jack and I—poor Jack! but I had carelessly left my bag on our seat. It was Jack's present, and he rushed back after it. The rest is a blank, but I learned afterward that our train was late; Jack was coming toward me, a smile on his handsome face, when there was a rush, a roar, glancing lights, and when I looked again Jack was down, almost at my feet, white, limp and senseless, but, thank God, not dead. By some mistake the Western express had passed without warning, he was past the rails, but the baggage car had struck him and hurled him, fortunately, away from the train. The bag was in his clenched hand, but I thought he had left me forever. The crowd surged in, a physician appeared, and he was borne into the depot. He revived a little, then went off in a swoon that seemed like death itself. They got him home on a mattress, the worst was known, he had a compound fracture of the limb; the bones were set, and I was left alone. Not until the kind doctor had gone and the unknown friends, did I realize a little how our holiday had ended.

There was the kitchen with our table pushed against the wall, but I had prepared no tea, for Jack lay there so deathly pale, save a red spot on each cheek, and he did not know me. Oh, Jack, will you die and leave your little Jill all alone? And then the tears came and I had a refreshing cry. After that I saw my work before me and prepared for it, praying that the good Lord would not leave me quite alone.

This was the case: Here was Jack confined to his bed perhaps for three months, possibly a cripple for life; he could earn nothing for the present; we had saved one hundred and twenty dollars; our rent was ten dollars a month; Jack had tumbled down and broken not his crown, but his leg, would Jill come tumbling after? I thought so for those first few hours, and then it came to me, What if he lay there in the last long sleep and I could not wait on him any more? and I fell on my knees with sobs of thankfulness, ashamed of repining.

How quickly we adjust ourselves to sober fact! For two weeks Jack had a high fever, and much of the time he talked of that bag, and how sorry he was he could not get it. Every day he seemed to be sinking lower and lower, and the old doctor eyed me wistfully as he went out; I knew what he was thinking of—how young she is to be left alone. One night, after two weeks of almost ceaseless watching, I fell asleep by his side, my head buried in my arms. I was utterly wearied in that dead stupor that comes from long wakefulness. After midnight something roused me. The moon was looking in upon us, and the light made Jack's face look deathly enough. His hand about my hair had roused me. I felt his pulse, it was going down rapidly. God was good to me; had I slept on it would have been too late to have helped him. I remembered what the doctor said when the fever turns give him more stimulant, or he will sink away. All night I fed him the stimulant every half hour, praying that I might be kept awake. With the morning sun he looked up. "Jill," he said—the first rational word he had uttered since he left me to rush into the car for that miserable bag—and then, goose that I was, I fainted dead away. When I came to myself, Jack was in a natural sleep; he had roused but a moment, and then in utter weakness dropped off to sleep.

But the worst was passed; he began to mend rapidly. "The Lord has remembered you," said the doctor, solemnly. The next day a friend took the burden from me a little, and I hardly knew what was passing for several days. But it was a long way out of the woods yet. How slow it was, after all, although Dr. Low said he gained wonderfully. Two months passed, and he could sit up but a short time in a day; but Jack had been working beyond his strength for months, and his recovery required time.

Half of our money was gone and the future looked dark, but Jack was hopeful and cheerful, and I sat and read to him hour after hour, and we discussed the old familiar subjects again, all the time I was racking my brains to devise some means to eke out our fast diminishing purse. When four months had gone Jack could limp about a little, but how thin and pale he was. We had just twenty dollars left, and that only by the strictest economy, and because the doctor would take nothing as a fee.

I had my hair down in the old way one evening; our landlord had just been in for the rent; there was but ten dollars left. I had ventured to broach our condition to Jack; I had tried not to trouble him with our financial matters. "Your hair is worth more to me than gold," he said, as he let it fall through his white hands. And then it flashed over me—the old joke—that I would sell my hair, if worst came to worst. The next day a neighbor stayed with Jack for awhile, and I went out on business. I went into several hair stores, and when I came out of the last one I had forty dollars, and my golden hair, a yard in length, was gone. I cried a little all the way home, but "for Jack," I said. How he stared when I took off my bonnet! "Jill, Jill!" he cried, and his voice broke. "I had to do it, Jack; we must live, and I got forty dollars for it." But he turned to the wall and did not speak; only the sobs shook his frame, and he a man; but he loved the golden hair.

"Jack," I whispered a half hour after, "don't you love me a little without the hair?"

"Oh, Jill," he cried, "to think you were obliged to do it!"

On the way home I had passed an art store, and some paintings in oil had attracted my attention. I had taken lessons—my father had been an artist—why could not I revive my skill and earn something now? I grudged the money for the material, but nothing venture nothing have, and so I began. I had some talent, I knew, and then Jack's pale face was an inspiration. It was at the time when rich people were crazy to have their china decorated by hand. My father's patient lessons were not forgotten, necessity gave me skill, and I surpassed myself. Dr. Low, on hearing of my desire and seeing some of my work, got an order from one of his rich patients. I succeeded so well with that, that other orders followed; we would not suffer after all. The good God was pitiful—he cared a little for Jack and I.

I did not tumble after Jack, as the nursery jingle has it; my crown was safe, although bereft of its wealth of hair. Jack was well at last, with only a little hitch in his gait. He got a position in the iron-works, and we bridged the chasm of pain, and we started up the hill again. He limped a little, and I looked like a boy with my shorn head, but love had lasted, we had each other and were thankful.

"My brave Jill!" he said, when we sat down the first night after he was at work again, and he eyed me fondly across the little stand; and then coming round to my chair, "Sweet Jill!" as he laid his love upon my lips.

"Don't be foolish, Jack," and I blushed as I did the first time he kissed me, years ago.

We are old married people now—that is, if twenty-six and thirty can be called old. We have left the dear little tenement. Prosperity came at last. Jack invented something that brought large returns. We have a house of our own, and more than twenty dollars a month I can expend now. A little Jack and Jill scamper about the floor, and "Dick," the bird, is getting old. Jack and I have had many outings since that first—none that we enjoyed more, until its sad finale—none that brought us terror. We have had our trials—who does not? Jack says "my hair is more beautiful than ever," and other nonsense that is positively foolish from staid people like us. But the honeymoon has lasted through all the years, the leisure of to-day has brought no truer affection than we had in that old room, where life and death fought for Jack.

Jack and Jill are still going up the hill. We have each other—that is our richest fortune. Our namesakes are never weary asking: "Mamma, tell us how big Jack and Jill were married, and lived happy ever since."—Good Housekeeping.

Occupation and the Sexes.

The leveling of the barriers that for so long held woman to the needle, kitchen and wash-tub, has been in rapid progress during the last decade. Aside from the women engaged on the stage, as artists, teachers and in scientific pursuits, milliners and dressmakers and as domestics, we find her numerous in the occupations hitherto, and up to a late date, considered peculiarly and inalienably man's. For instance, she is doctor and surgeon to the number of 2,462. She is commercial traveler to the number of 272; undertaker to the number of 55; barber to the number of 2,902; clergyman to the number of 165; dentist 61 and lawyer 75; painter and varnisher, 266; printer, lithographer and stereotyper, 3,456; and tailor to the number of 52,098, whilst man is only milliner and dressmaker to the number of 3,173. From this it will be seen that the "dear creatures" are crowding on to man's territory with alarming rapidity and in awe-inspiring numbers, driving man—poor fellow—from one retreat to another. The blessed privilege of popping the question is, however, largely man's prerogative yet, though even in this particular women are showing a disposition to encroach upon the rights he has so long and fondly cherished as all his own.—Midland Industrial Gazette.

THE "OLD MAN."

The Peculiar Habits of a Naturalist's Pet Orang.

Because of his bald and shiny head, his solemn, wrinkled and melancholy visage, his air of profound gravity and Senatorial wisdom, we got to calling him the Old Man, and forgot to give him any Christian name. A thin growth of brick-red hair grew straight up the back of his head and over the crown, making, in certain lights, a perfect halo around his bald, brown pate, reminding one rather forcibly of certain pictures by the old masters. I measured him for the first time on October 15th, in spite of his vigorous opposition, and found that his height was 21 3-4 inches, extent of arms, 34 1-2 inches, and his weight 10 1-2 pounds. His body was short and thick, and, like all orangs, his arms were so long and his legs so short, that by stooping forward a little his hands easily touched the ground. In walking, he invariably went on all fours, placing the back of the fingers and ball of the thumb, instead of the palm, upon the ground, and he also turned his toes under. His gait on the ground was very much like that of a man going on crutches with both feet injured alike. On the ground he moved slowly, seeming quite out of his element, but his feats in climbing, and his performances on the slackrope, were highly entertaining. He was fresh from the jungle when brought to me, but I soon convinced him that my intentions were honorable and slowly gained his confidence. For three or four days he would not allow me to hold him in my arms unless I would let him grasp some firm object with at least one hand. The action plainly showed that he feared I would play a trick on him by letting him fall. Presently, however, I hit upon a plan which conquered his suspicion. I made him climb up to my shoulder to get the bananas of which he was very fond, and after that a banana held at arm's length above my head would start him climbing my body as if it were a tree until the tempting bait was reached. He soon became very fond of being held in my arms, and when I grew tired of holding him he would grasp the folds of my flannel shirt and hold himself—quite an improvement upon the puny helplessness of human infants. Next to eating seven bananas at once, his greatest delight was in sitting lazily in my lap while I sat reading, writing, or even eating, sprawling out his legs and arms, catching hold of my book or my penholder, or pulling at the tablecloth. Once while holding him in my lap at dinner he suddenly made a pass at the roast duck which lay before me, and had his teeth in it before I could recover from my surprise. On one occasion when I sat eating he leisurely climbed up the back of my chair, squatted on the topmost round, leaned lazily forward against me, and rested his chin comfortably on my shoulder. And there he sat all through the meal, watching the performance with the air of a connoisseur.—From Hornaday's "Two Years in a Jungle."

PERFUNCTORY HOSPITALITY.

Invitations That Often Mean Nothing—Purely Formal Requests.

The writer had been entertained for the first time at the house of a certain hospitable old gentleman, and both were sitting, with half an hour to wait for the arrival of the carriage in which the host proposed to take the guest to the railway station, when the former said: "I want to have you be sure to come and see me again, and if you don't have any business calls this way, come without them." He then added, apologetically: "I suppose I ought to have said this when bidding you good-bye at the station, but I like to say things when I think of them." There was a charming naturalness in the old gentleman's invitation, and a whole-souled hospitality that were not to be misunderstood. They would have been almost totally lost if the invitation had been reserved for a last act of formality, as many are in the habit of doing. One may be justified in taking very little stock in "come and see me again," when accompanied with a "good-bye." Though a suitable feeling may stand behind the invitation in such case, yet it is not to be compared to the certainty that exists in the less formal mode. If one is staying at a friend's house for a portion of the day and is about to leave just before meal time, he must not think of accepting an invitation to remain for the meal when it is made at the time of departure, the guest, perhaps, with hat and cane in hand. The host could not say in [illegible] "Stop and dine with me, I do not expect that you will, and rather hope that you will not, though you have a license to force yourself upon me." Yet, how many people there are who issue their invitations in just this formal way, as if to get the credit for hospitality without conferring it upon any one.—Good Housekeeping.

Glove and Handkerchief.

Gloves are most expensive items, and yet the outlay for them may be considerably reduced by a little care.

Those who wear silk handkerchiefs round the neck in cold weather will find pale pink the best color, because it will bear washing and always look new and good afterward. The same can hardly be said of any other tint, for though a light blue will sometimes stand soap and water it is but rarely, and white handkerchiefs turn yellow.

Good kid gloves must be sparingly used by the economically-minded, watched at the tips of the fingers so that the first stitch that gives way may be repaired and always pulled out when taken off, instead of being turned inside one another and made into a little ball. None but the best are worth buying, and light ones will clean once or twice, though it is next to impossible to perform this operation at home.

The great trouble with silk gloves is the tendency of the finger tips to wear rapidly into holes, and the very best way of avoiding it is to put a tiny bit of cotton wool or wadding into the extreme end of each finger. Some people before beginning to wear them tack a tiny bit of an old glove in, but the stitches, however carefully done, have an unpleasant trick of showing, and the wool is far preferable.

With Suede gloves the case is quite different: the light, undyed colors soil far sooner than they wear out, and it is advisable to have a pair of boxwood hands of the right size on which to wash and dry them. The mixture for the purpose should be made of white curd soap, cut up small and boiled in a little milk, and the dirty gloves should be well rubbed and cleaned with a little bit of flannel dipped in it. After being sponged with warm—not hot—water to remove this, they should be wiped with a towel and left on the boxwood stretchers until quite dry.—[illegible]

PITH AND POINT.

—The pin seems to be the lode star of woman's existence. It's hair-pin, rolling-pin or pin money that she's reaching out for continually.

—A prominent mathematician's wife has presented him with a pair of twins. He has now attained the full sum of human happiness, with two to carry.—Chicago Tribune.

—"Mother" avers in the Boston Globe, in reply to another correspondent, that "a sixteen-year-old girl can soften and whiten her hands by soaking them in dish-water three times a day."

—A crazy Pennsylvania girl who talks constantly in rhyme, has been sent to an asylum. This is a very good beginning. Now why not tackle some of the others who are still out?—Somerville Journal.

—An exchange tells "how men should eat who can not exercise. We have never had any experience with men of this class, but should suppose they ate with a knife and fork. The laws of polite society can not be altered to suit any particular set of men.—N. Y. Graphic.

—Once there was a hired man who was constantly astonishing his employer, a farmer, by doing strange and unexpected things. One day the farmer went into the barn, and found his man had hung himself. Looking at the dangling body a few minutes, he exclaimed: "What on earth will that fellow do next?"—San Francisco Argonaut.

—The Burlington Free Press says, "Mighty poor dogs sometimes make fine sausage-meat." This shows how far the education of the dumb brutes has advanced within the past few years. We have no doubt that in time dogs can be hired to perform many of the menial duties for which we are now obliged to pay high wages.—The Judge.

—How the intense agonies of this artistic age creep upon us ere we know it. The newest and sweetest idea is for the young lady who has just returned from the seaside to paint a neat little yacht race on the lining of a shell she herself picked up on the sounding sands, and send it to her best young man. This signifies, when translated into the vernacular, "I will be the Genesta to your Puritan." This is very encouraging to the young man.—Hartford Post.

—Last summer we often admired the kind and genteel manner with which one of the society young men of Crested Butte attended the footsteps of a certain fair damsel. How anxious he was to help her over every muddy or rough place! But now we see her jump the ditch, splash through the mud, and climb over piles of lumber, while he has plenty to do to hunt a dry crossing for himself. They are married now.—Denver Tribune.

WIDE AWAKE.

Alertness One of the Indispensable Conditions of Success.

It is interesting to notice the different degrees of success attained in business or professional life, by men who apparently start with equal chances. Those who fail of "success" in gaining money may be as successful as the millionaires in making themselves useful and their lives happy; yet an observer may learn much from noting the causes which led to failure or to success. One characteristic of successful men is close and wide-awake attention to the work in hand, such, for instance, as marked a New York driver on the line of stages which have recently been withdrawn from Broadway. He had a genius for driving a stage, and was noted for keeping his stage full of passengers, and for taking in more fares than any other driver on the route. His success was not accidental. His eyes were forever on the lookout, both on Broadway and in the side streets, so that he never failed to see a distant nod or a slight gesture. A similar alertness for business is noticeable among the fruit-peddlers, the boot-blacks and the news-boys of New York. Three carts full of bananas and other fruit may be often seen standing close together by the sidewalk. The man in the middle cart will work every moment—standing up, calling attention to his stock, and alert to grapple with any one who comes up with the slightest intention of buying. But the other venders will be seated and half-dozing, or reading a newspaper, carelessly waiting for a customer to ask for fruit. Before noon the appearance of the wagons shows the inevitable result. By night, the middle wagon is empty, while the other venders wheel home a good part of their stock to keep till the next day, and complain of "bad luck" and "hard times." Some of the boot-blacks fly about through the crowds like shuttles, eagerly examining every pair of boots, and asking here and there: "Have a shine, sir?" Even the beggars keep a close watch on the stream of coppers, and never stay long in a spot when their income begins to fall away. This alertness which takes advantage of every opening, is one of the indispensable conditions of success.—Youth's Companion.

NOVEL DISCOVERY.

Salt to Take the Place of Hot Air in Seasoning Lumber.

"What do you think of that scheme?" asked the proprietor of a planing-mill, after showing a Sun reporter round his premises.

"Think it's immense. But will it be practically effective?"

The scheme in question consisted in a new, novel and rapid method of seasoning lumber by the use of common salt. The model of the proposed new drier was built in the shape of an ordinary barn or shed, with double walls, the outside being built of brick and the inside of common one-quarter-inch sheathing. The distance between the inner and outer walls was about fifteen inches, and the space between the two was filled up with common salt. It is notorious that salt crystals are great absorbents of moisture, and that is about the only thing in the new process of drying lumber. If it becomes practically successful, it is bound to revolutionize the mill trade. The lumber is simply stacked in the building, and the only thing necessary is to watch the salt.

"As soon as the first lot is thoroughly dampened it is run off by spouts, and a new lot of dry material is run in from the roof, and the same process is duplicated until the moisture or sap in the lumber is thoroughly extracted."

"Will it work?" was asked.

"So far as I have experimented it beats any thing I ever saw. It doesn't warp the lumber as the hot air process does, and is very cheap to run."

"What do you do with the wet salt?"

"Run it through a furnace, dry it, and use it again. Oh, it's a big scheme, and will knock out all the builders who have been making fortunes in putting up hot-air driers for furniture and mill men."—Cincinnati Sun.

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

CASTAWAYS.

On a desert island,
Far out of the sea,
Are two little castaways
Very dear to me.

Like the parlor sofa
Seems the isle to me!
One so very old as I
Can't expect to see.

How we all shall miss them
Every night and day!
Wonder if they're sorry now
That they're cast away.

Here's a piece of candy,
If our boys were here
I would give them each a piece.
Now I can't. Oh, dear!

"Please give us some, auntie,"
Calls one little lad.
"We ain't castaways no more.
Now ain't you real glad?"

From the sofa springing,
What a shout they raise!
They were only "making b'lieve"
Being castaways.

HESITATING HARRY.

A Helpful Lesson by Which a Habit of Indecision Was Corrected.

"If you once begin, Harry, you must go every day," said Mrs. Baxter, looking at her little boy, who stood at the front door turning his wandering gaze first up the street, then down. "If you go to school at all, you must go regularly, we can't have any more of this doing things by halves. Remember, it is to be your own choice," she continued. "I do not care whether you go or not this term, but I do care to have you know your own mind, Harry."

"Well, I guess I would rather go," answered the boy, as his eye caught a group of his companions far down the street, going in the direction of the school-house.

A moment more and he was trudging along with his slate under his arm, looking almost as important as he felt. But when he reached the border of the playground, instead of finding the boys out having a jolly time—lo! there was not one to be seen. The school-house door was shut, and work had evidently begun.

Then did the spirit of hesitating again seize hold of him. Should he go in at all, or should he not? It was a great deal pleasanter out-doors in the bright September sunshine than it could possibly be in those closed walls. Why should he deliberately make himself a prisoner for all the days to come? If he entered to-day he must go regularly. His mother had said there must be no excuses. Five—ten minutes he hesitated, then slowly turned away.

Down to the brook he went, where he often had pleasant times; he found a mossy seat and threw himself down for a morning of pleasure. How still everything was? The water was flowing quietly over the stones, and even the birds were silent. Had they all gone away? They had no work to do, no school, no study.

Slowly the morning passed. He was not enjoying himself as he had expected to do, and he was vexed to think that he was not. Harry had not yet learned that true enjoyment is never found in idleness.

He wandered through the woods, found a few late, wild blackberries, and amused himself—or tried to do so—by throwing stones at one or two unsuspecting squirrels, but all to no purpose. Had he but known the words of the wise King, he would doubtless have said with him: "All is vanity and vexation of spirit."

He was glad when noon came and it was time to return home; and there was quite an air of business about him as he sallied forth to meet the boys and walk with them down the street.

"Why didn't you come to school, Harry? I tell you what, you missed it! We've got a splendid teacher, and he makes everything so interesting I'd rather go to school than play," called Dan Holmes.

"I guess I'll go this afternoon," said Harry, sheepishly. "I didn't get off quite in time this morning."

"All right then; I'll call in for you after dinner, for you want to be there in time. The new teacher is awful particular about that!" and with a hop-skip-and-jump, Dan hurried on.

"You see I'm on time," he called, putting his head in the dining-room door half an hour later. "I told Harry he would have a better time at school, and he had better come along," he continued, turning to Mrs. Baxter. "Don't you think so?"

"Did you not go to school this morning, Harry?" his mother asked in surprise.

Harry blushed in silent shame.

"Harry understood that he was to decide this morning," she went on, speaking to Dan. "He has decided by staying away, and he can not go now."

In vain did Harry plead. His mother felt that staying home one term would not be too dear a price to pay for correcting this habit of indecision. "If you can only learn to know your own mind and to work with a purpose," she said, "it will be worth more to you than all you could learn from books these many weeks."

And even so it proved. Slowly enough the days dragged on. The boys of his own age were all at school, and even when he met them they seemed to have little in common. They were always talking of some good time that he knew nothing about. But the lesson was a helpful one to him, for whenever he was tempted to half do a thing, or to turn back after once making up his mind in the right way, he remembered that September day, and what he had lost through his indecision.—Truth Seeker.

A SAD FATE.

The Dreadful Thing That Happened Under the Sea.

"Ah me!" said the sponge. "Dear! dear! dear! well-a-day!"

"What is the matter?" asked the bath-tub. "Have you been squeezed too hard, or has the nurse rubbed soap on you again? I know soap never agrees with you."

"I am rather exhausted by the squeezing, I confess," replied the sponge; "but it is not for that I sighed. I am gradually getting used to these daily tortures.

"But I was thinking about the past; about my beautiful home, from which I was so cruelly torn, and about the happy, happy life I led there."

"Tell me about it," said the bath-tub. "You have told me before, but I always find it interesting. My home was in a tin-shop, as you are aware. The society was good, but it was rather a dull place, on the whole. You lived you say"—

"On the coast of Syria," said the sponge, "with a sight of the coast of beautiful Syria. There is a tiny bay, where the shore is bold and rocky. The rocks are above the water, but down below they are covered with lovely plants, and fringed with gay mosses, beautiful to behold. The bottom of the sea is covered with silver sand, and over it move the crimson and gold-colored jelly-fish, the scarlet star-fish, and a thousand other brilliant creatures, making the neighborhood always attractive and delightful. On a certain ledge of rock, close by the bottom, I lived, as happy an animal as could be found in the Mediterranean Sea."

"What do you mean?" interrupted the nail-brush, which was new, and very ignorant. "You, an animal? I don't believe it. If you had a back were bone, and your hair pig-bristles, like mine, you might at least call yourself an animal product; but you have no back that I can see, nor hair either."

"You are extremely rude," said the sponge. "But you know no better, and ignorance should always be pitied rather than blamed. I was an animal, my young friend, though now, alas, I am only the skeleton of one.

"I lived, as I said, a very happy life on my rocky ledge. I never moved from it. I had no occasion to do so, even if I had been provided with legs, as many animals are. I never had any fancy for a roving life. To draw in the warm delicious water through the thousand small holes and canals of my frame, and spout it out again through my large holes, was my chief occupation, and one of which I was never weary. The water was full of tiny creatures of all kinds, and these formed my food, and gave me plenty to eat. In the spring I was always busy with my maternal duties. I brought out hundreds of lovely little young eggs, yellow and white—the prettiest eggs you ever saw. In a short time they put out their tiny feelers, a sort of fringe of waving lashes, like those things on the nurse's eyes, as soon as they appeared I knew my babies were ready to come out, and, sure enough, they soon broke through the egg-covering, and waving their lashes, swam out into the sea.

"At first they stayed near me, delighting my heart with their pretty tricks; but very soon they felt the need of homes of their own, and went off to fix themselves on rocks, or coral-trees, and become, in their turn, full-grown sponges, like myself. I could not complain, for I had left my own mother in the same way. I never saw any of them again, except one dear child, who made his home on the shell of a large crab. He grew finely; and became a noble sponge; but the crab never seemed to mind him in the least, and carried him about with him wherever he went. In this way he often passed near my ledge, and as the crab was a friendly and sensible fellow we often had a pleasant chat together.

"One day, one dreadful, dreadful day, I was talking thus with my son and his landlord, when suddenly something huge and dark was seen above us, swimming slowly downward through the clear water. At first I paid no attention to it, supposing it to be a shark, or some other large fish; but as it drew nearer I saw that it was no fish, but a strange and horrible monster, the like of which had never been seen under the sea. It had four long arms, something like those of a cuttle-fish, only much less graceful, and divided at the end into five claws, or feelers. (I have since learned that two of these arms are called legs, and that the feelers are fingers and toes.) It had gleaming eyes, and in one claw it held something bright and shining. Ah! it makes me cold to think of it. To my horror the monster fixed his shining eyes on me, and swam directly toward my ledge. The crab scuttled off with my son on his back, and I was left alone and helpless. I saw one of the long arms extended; the five feelers clutched me in their grasp. I shrank down, and clung with all my might to the rock, but in vain. The shining thing in the monster's other claw was slipped under me. It cut my delicate fibers, I felt them give way one by one; and at last, with one terrible cut and a violent wrench, I was torn from my peaceful home; torn from it, alas! forever!

"I was thrown into a bag full of other sponges, which the monster had slung about his middle, and then he pursued his path of destruction. I will pass briefly over the dark days that followed the drying in the sun, till all the life was dried out of me, the fearful squeezing, with thousands of other wretches like myself, into wooden cases; the voyage over seas; finally the exposure of my bleached and miserable skeleton in the window of a druggist's shop. All these things are too painful to be dwelt upon, and, as you know, I am now resigned to my lot. I find in you a sympathizing friend. I have water given me (though of very inferior quality) morning and night, and, were it not for the soap and the squeezing, I should make no complaint. But often, as I hang idly in my wire basket, my thoughts go back to my own dear home under the Syrian shores; and I long for a draught of the warm, delicious water, for the cool retirement of my rocky ledge, and for the sight of my dear son, riding gracefully about on the back of his crab."—Our Little Ones.

HOW AXES ARE MADE.

Pittsburgh the Great Center of the Manufacture in America.

The manufacture of axes in Pittsburgh is in amount about double that of any other city in the United States, and about equal to the combined productions of all other places. The greater part of the trade is reached through Baltimore, St. Louis, Chicago and New Orleans, as distributing points. Competing manufactories are located in Boston, Collinsville, N. H., Lewistown, Pa., and in Michigan. The handles are made chiefly in Ohio and Indiana. Only a comparatively small number are sold with the axes, as purchasers at retail most frequently prefer to select a handle to suit their tastes. The demand for axes with handles already adjusted is said to be constantly increasing.

In the manufacture of axes the material passes through twelve different operations before it is ready for labeling and boxing. At first it is a rectangular piece of iron, about three-fourths of an inch thick, three and one-half inches wide and about six inches long. The bit is of steel, and in some instances is inserted in a slit made in the iron, and in others it is drawn over the edge of the iron. There is a growing demand for axes made entirely of steel. The most important part of the process of manufacture is the tempering. "This is really where the axe is made," said a manufacturer. The grinding and polishing is the most laborious part of the process. It is here that the rough, irregular shaped semblance of an axe is ground and polished until it is bright as a mirror. It is said that the work will prove fatal within five years to any man who pursues it steadily. The air is filled with impalpable dust from the stones, and many of the workmen tie small sponges saturated with water over their nostrils.—Pittsburgh Times.

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 19th day of February, A. D. 1884, executed by Charles W. Fox and Lydia E. Fox his wife, of the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, to Caroline S. Blair, of the city of Newark and state of New Jersey, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Charlevoix, in Liber 7 of mortgages on page [illegible] on the [illegible] day of February, A. D. 1884, and whereas, according to the terms of said mortgage the interest thereon was to be paid annually at the rate of eight per cent per annum, and in case said interest should not be paid when the same became due, or within thirty days thereafter, then the mortgagee might at her option declare the whole amount of principal and interest to be due and payable immediately thereafter, and more than two years having elapsed since the execution of said mortgage and no interest having been paid thereon the said mortgagee hereby elected to declare the whole amount of said mortgage to be now due and payable; and whereas, the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of $[illegible] of principal and interest, and which is the whole amount claimed to be unpaid on the said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law or in chancery to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's hall, that being the building in which the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix is held at the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, on Thursday the seventh day of January, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day, which said premises are described in the said mortgage as follows to wit: The south half (½) of the north east quarter (1-4) and the north-east quarter (1-4) of the north-east quarter (1-4) of section twenty two (22) in township thirty four (34) north of range four (4) west, Charlevoix county, Michigan.

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage dated the 12th day of June, A. D. 1882, executed by Joseph J. Bennett and Alvira Bennett his wife, of the township of Hayes, county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, to William H. Hurlbut of South Haven, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Charlevoix, in liber four (4) of mortgages on page five hundred and forty five (545) on the 11th day of June, A. D. 1882, and the same is now owned by the said William H. Hurlbut, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and thirty-two dollars and fifty cents ($132.50) of the principal and interest, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage. Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described in said mortgage to wit: The North-east quarter (¼) of the Southwest quarter (¼) of Section nineteen (19) in township thirty-three (33) north of range seven (7) west, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, containing forty acres more or less, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage, with the costs and expenses of this foreclosure and the stipulated costs mentioned in said mortgage, will be sold at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of Loveday's Hall in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, that being the place of holding the circuit Court in and for said county of Charlevoix, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1885, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day.

Dated September 16th 1885.

BEECHER AND TALMAGE.

A Wicked Newspaper Man on the Thunderers of Brooklyn.

While Beecher is thinking away in Plymouth church Talmage is not idle in the Tabernacle. As the boys say, "Talmage is a corker." He draws a much larger crowd than Beecher, but it is a different crowd. It is the crowd without brains, the crowd that likes to be amused and finds Talmage a cheap man to amuse them. He is sensational and so is Beecher, but they do not conflict. Beecher's sensationalism consists in presenting startling facts about education, or religion, or politics. Talmage's sensationalism consists in a monkey-show, girating on the platform like a clown, and by raking up old and disputed topics for discussion, and in reopening old sores. The cornetist who leads the singing helps to attract the crowd, and Talmage knows the chords of the human heart, for he plays on them unceasingly. He does not seek to educate in religious matters. He selects a text, and around that he weaves a garland of words, and here and there he intersperses old anecdotes and stories that sometime cause a smile or a tear. Beecher does none of this. He is above it, and there are some things that he will not plunge boldly into. Talmage will undertake anything for notoriety. He would write a Bible if he were asked to.

Both Beecher and Talmage have had their tussles with Bob Ingersoll, but haven't you noticed that Beecher has not had much to say against Royal Bob lately? Talmage, however, seldom misses a chance to hit the great orator. His blow is a blow of a sandbag, though. He doesn't sharpen a delicate stiletto and stick it into his opponent's heart as Beecher does. Talmage exhausts himself at one swoop and then Ingersoll jumps on him, and if one man ever gave another a drubbing on the platform Ingersoll certainly did Talmage.

A few years ago Ingersoll wrote a paper on "The Christian Religion" that was published in the North American Review. It was a very able article and attracted great attention. It was nothing more than the old views that Ingersoll had so often expressed in public, but each sentence was effective, and having been published in so prominent a magazine they were given more weight than they really deserved.

Thorndyke Rice, editor of the Review, had engaged Judge Jere Black, of Pennsylvania, to reply to the article. Black had given the subject much thought and study. He was the ablest constitutional lawyer in the country. He was a splendid speaker, a man of rare attainments, a clear logician, he was just the man to reply to Ingersoll, and to smash into atoms the indictment that Ingersoll had drawn up. The church people seemed confident. They believed their knight would slay the infidel.

Well, the article was published, and candor compels the admission it was a lamentable failure.

Black seemed to have lost his grip but he severely denounced Ingersoll as a charlatan, and in a general way scoffed at his unbelief.

To this Ingersoll replied, and Black admitted that for once he had been worsted. The great infidel didn't spare his man. He took off hair and hide at the same time, and left his victim without a word to say. It was at this juncture that Beecher came to the front, and this will establish the point that I have made, that there are some contracts too big for him to enter into. Editor Rice called on Beecher.

"Have you read the discussion between Col. Ingersoll and Judge Black?" he asked him.

"Yes, very carefully," was Beecher's reply.

"Which do you think has the best of it?"

"Ingersoll, decidedly."

"But the argument is not finished, Mr. Beecher, and I came to ask you to take up the case against Ingersoll and refute his statements."

"I should like to very much."

"Then why not do it? I will give you $5,000 for a paper on 'The Christian Religion' that will dispose of the atheistic question at once and forever."

"Yes, I guess you would," concluded Beecher, "but I won't undertake it. I can't do it. No man can do it. It is an impossibility. We may believe that Ingersoll is wrong, but we can't give positive proof of it."

That was manly anyhow.—New York Cor. in Providence Telegram.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The Doctrine of Substitution Forcibly Presented,

Showing the Place Held by Vicarious Sacrifice in the Education of the World—The Heroism of Sacrificing Self for Other's Good.

The following is a recent sermon preached in Brooklyn Tabernacle by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage on the subject of "Blood," as applied to vicarious sacrifice. His text was:

Without shedding of blood is no remission.—Hebrews, ix., 22.

The preacher said: John G. Whittier, the last of the great school of American poets that made the last quarter of a century brilliant, asked me in the White Mountains one morning after prayers, in which I had given out Cowper's famous hymn about the "The fountain filled with blood:" "Do you really believe there is a literal application of the blood of Christ to the soul?" My negative reply then is my negative reply now. The Bible statement agrees with all physicians and all physiologists and all scientists in saying that the blood is the life, and in the Christian religion it means simply that Christ's life was given for our life. Hence all this talk of men who say the Bible story of blood is disgusting, and that they don't want what they call a "slaughter-house religion," only shows their incapacity or unwillingness to look through the figure of speech toward the thing signified. The blood that on the darkest Friday the world ever saw oozed, or trickled, or poured from the brow and the side and hands and the feet of the illustrious sufferer, back of Jerusalem, in a few hours coagulated and dried up and forever disappeared; and if man had depended on the application of the literal blood of Christ, there would not have been [illegible]

[illegible] ing. On and on, until some morning finds him in a delirium, in which he talks of home, and then rises and says he must go and look after those patients. He is told to lie down, but he fights his attendants until he falls back, and is weaker and weaker, and dies for people with whom he had no kinship, and far away from his family, and is hastily put away in a stranger's tomb, and only the fifth part of a [illegible] line tells us of his sacrifice, his name just mentioned among five. Yet he has touched the furthest height of sublimity in that three weeks of humanitarian service. He goes straight as an arrow to the bosom of him who said, "I was sick, and ye visited me." Life for life. Blood for blood. Substitution.

In the legal profession I see the same principle of self-sacrifice. In 1846, Wm. Freeman, a pauperized and idiotic negro, was at Auburn, N. Y., on trial for murder. He had slain the entire Van Ness family. The foaming wrath of the community could be kept off him only by armed constables. Who would volunteer to be his counsel. No attorney wanted to sacrifice his popularity by such an ungrateful task. All were silent save one, a young lawyer with feeble voice, that could hardly be heard outside the bar, pale and thin and awkward. It was Wm. H. Seward, who saw that the prisoner was idiotic and irresponsible and ought to be put in an asylum rather than put to death, the heroic counsel uttering these beautiful words: "I speak now in the hearing of a people who have prejudged the prisoner and condemned me for pleading in his behalf. He is a convict, a pauper, a negro, without intellect, sense or emotion. My child, with an affectionate smile, disarms my careworn face of its frown whenever I cross my threshold. The beggar in the street obliges me to give, because he says, 'God bless you,' as I pass. My dog caresses me with fondness if I will but smile on him. My horse recognizes me when I fill his manger. Senator Miller's Able Effort Before the New York Convention.

The speech delivered by Hon. Warner Miller on assuming the duties of temporary chairman of the Republican State Convention was [illegible] and temperate, touching briefly upon each important issue pending between the great political parties of the period. Mr. Miller took strong ground in favor of the principles upon which the Republican organization is based, and after briefly sketching the history of their application in the practical conduct of government, and the results accomplished, proceeded to arraign Democracy for its numerous delinquencies in general and in detail, including its suppression of free elections in the South, by means of which minority rule has been imposed upon the Nation. This feature of the situation was dwelt upon with an earnestness which shows that Mr. Miller is in full sympathy with his fellow-Senator from Ohio, John Sherman. He waved no "bloody shirt," neither did he seek to inflame sectional animosities or fight over again the battles of the civil war. He contented himself with a protest against the injustice done to States in which the elective franchise is carefully guarded and maintained in respect of all who are entitled to its exercise, adding a warning to the South that perseverance in debauching the suffrage must necessarily result in undermining public virtue. Wrong-doing in respect of a fair ballot and an honest count is certain to involve criminality in other matters relating to the management of governmental affairs, and finally end in utter decadence of moral sense among the offenders who owe their advancement to it.

The question, as Mr. Miller pointed out, is not one of loyalty to the Union. Nobody imagines that the bulldozers and fraudulent manipulators of the South contemplate another attempt to overthrow [illegible]

GENERAL LOGAN'S SWORD.

It Was Never Taken from the Illinois Senator—An Indignant Denial.

The extraordinary story is in circulation in the West that General Logan, at the battle of Hartsville, Tenn., was captured, and pretended to be dead so that he might be left on the field, and that his sword was taken from him. The following interview, had by the Tribune correspondent with General Logan, shows how baseless and malicious the report is:

"Have you seen the statement that is being published in many of the papers of the country," General Logan was asked, "stating that, at the battle of Hartsville, Tenn., you were captured, but pretended death so that you were left on the ground, but that your sword and papers were taken from you? Is this true?"

"It is utterly false in every particular. I never was at Hartsville before the war, during the war, or since the war."

"The whole thing, then, is a fabrication?"

"It certainly is; since you have called my attention to it, however, I will say that I have noticed recently that the Messrs. Payne, who make this statement, have changed the locality and say now that it was at the battle of Fort Donelson. If they make this statement applicable to me at Fort Donelson, it is just as false as the one they make in reference to Hartsville. At Fort Donelson I was severely wounded, but was not left on the battle-field. I was taken to a hospital, had my wound dressed, and thence was taken to General Grant's headquarters boat, Uncle Sam, and remained there till I was able to be removed. The statement that I ever 'played 'possum' to prevent capture, or that I was ever near being captured by these or any other persons, or that I was ever [illegible]

—A stepladder of plush is the latest thing to put in a parlor corner.

—A farmer's wife says that mustard-seed will prevent mould forming in vinegar.

—There is a foolish prejudice, the New England Farmer says, against feeding apples to stock. Fed in moderation, they are good for all kinds of farm animals, which are generally very fond of them.

—To give some idea how quickly milk will absorb odors one has only to place a saucer of milk in a larder in which meat or game is hung. In a few hours the milk becomes so tainted that no animal will touch it.—Troy Times.

—We recently saw a sateen dress which had been washed, and it looked almost like new. No soap was used, but the dress was washed in borax water, which restored the gloss. One objection to a sateen dress is that it never looks well washed in the ordinary way. This method is worth trying.—Good Housekeeping.

—The Cultivator says that a young pig should not be fed much corn, and it is from young pigs that the greatest amount of growth is secured for food consumed. But on a farm where cows are kept and butter made the corn may be turned into pork by feeding it to the cows. This will pay in milk and butter, and an abundant supply of milk with a little meal is just what is wanted for growing pigs.

—As soon as rainwater enters the soil it becomes very different from its character when falling through the air. If particles of soil contain nitrogen, phosphoric acid or potash in soluble condition, the water at once appropriates these and holds them until drawn upon by growing plants. Hence, the frequent watering is a partial substitute for manuring. In a moist-growing season any soil except [illegible]

PERCHERON HORSES.

What the Commissioner of Agriculture Said of Percheron Horses.

Hon. George B. Loring, Commissioner of Agriculture of the United States, having promised to meet with the Percheron Horse-Breeders of America, at Chicago, Nov. 15, 1883, telegraphed as follows: "I regret exceedingly my inability to be with you. Am heartily in sympathy with your position. Physician positively forbids my leaving the house. My disappointment is greater than yours. The Percherons are recognized as a distinct breed in France, and are entitled to a Stud Book there and in this country as much as thoroughbreds, and as much as any breed of cattle to a herd book. Their introduction has greatly improved the farm and draft horses of this country, and will, undoubtedly, improve the large carriage and omnibus horses. I think the publication of a Stud Book in both countries will ultimately, in this case as in all others, add greatly to the future value of the breed." It is gratifying to know similar sentiments are entertained by some of the prominent importers, notably among them, Mr. M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Illinois, who, buying none but pedigreed stock, has done more toward the introduction of the finest types of the breed than, we might almost say, all other men, having imported nearly 2,000 since 1872.

"My Friend, Major Schurz."

The best authorities declare that it is highly presumptuous for a clerk, tradesman, artisan, or, indeed, for a person in any business or occupation, to address his customers as friends and acquaintances simply because of the business relations existing between the two.

FOR THE CURE OF

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER,

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

CONTAGIOUS!

I am a native of England, and while I was in that country I contracted a terrible blood poison, and for two years was under treatment as an out-door patient at Nottingham Hospital, England, but was not cured. I suffered the most agonizing pains in my bones and was covered with sores all over my body and limbs. Finally I completely lost all hope in that country, and sailed for America, and was treated at Roosevelt in this city, as well as by a prominent physician in New York having no connection with the hospitals. I saw the advertisement of Swift's Specific, and I determined to give it a trial. [illegible]

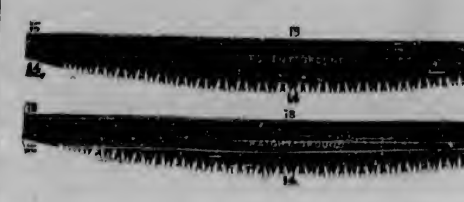
THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.



We would call especial attention to the improvement in Cross-cut Saws described herein, and the advantages derived from this method of manufacture.

All Cross-cut Saws have heretofore been ground in a straight line from end to end, as shown in the cut marked "Straight-Ground." As a result a saw made 14 gauge thick at the centre of the edge, and beveled to 18 gauge at the back, will be but 16 gauge thick at the edge, near the end of the saw, or in other words, the teeth vary two gauges in thickness on the cutting edge, as shown in diagram.

The improvement in the "Simonds" Crescent-Ground Cross-cut Saws consists in grinding the saw in crescent lines, parallel to the cutting edge, as shown in cut marked "Crescent-Ground," in which case the edge or teeth are of even thickness throughout the entire length of saw, while the ends are increased two gauges in thickness. In consequence the saw can be ground thinner on the back, as it does not bind in the kerf as others do, and it requires less set, for each tooth does an equal amount of work, and has equal thickness of strength to hold the set required for clearance. Being two gauges heavier, and consequently stiffer at the ends, the operators can push, as well pull without causing it to "buckle,"—and for felling trees it has been demonstrated that it has no equal in the market.

The Crescent-Ground Cross-cut Saw is manufactured exclusively by this Company, and is protected by two patents, dated Dec. 20, 1882; and we would further, say that saws have never before been manufactured in this way, nor substantially in the manner described.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The Queen of Sheba's Visit to King Solomon.

The Manner in Which the Jewish Monarch's Magnificence Impressed His Royal Visitor and the Useful Lessons to be Drawn Therefrom.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, in a recent sermon in Brooklyn Tabernacle, took the subject of the Queen of Sheba's visit to King Solomon for his theme. The text was:

Behold, the half was not told me.—II. Kings, x. 7.

Solomon had resolved that Jerusalem should be the center of all sacred, regal and commercial magnificence. He set himself to work and monopolized the surrounding desert as a highway for his caravans. He built the city of Palmyra around one of the principal wells of the East, so that all the long trains of merchandise from the East were obliged to stop there, pay toll and leave part of their wealth in the hands of Solomon's merchants. He named the fortress Thapsacus of the chief part of the Euphrates, and put under guard everything that passed there. The three great products of Palestine—wine pressed from the richest clusters and celebrated all the world over; oil, which in that hot country is the entire substitute for butter and lard, and was pressed from the olive branches until every tree in the country became an oil well; and honey which was the entire substitute for sugar—these three great products of the country Solomon exported; and received in turn fruits and precious woods and the animals of every clime. He went down to Ezion-geber and ordered a fleet of ships to be constructed, oversaw the workmen and watched the launching of the flotilla which was to go out on more than a year's voyage to bring home the wealth of the then known world. He heard that the ...

... high social position. Alas, that it is not! If there are those here to-day who have been favored of fortune, or, as I might better put it, favored of God, surrender all you have and all you expect to be to the Lord who blessed this Queen of Sheba. Certainly you are not ashamed to be found in this Queen's company. I am glad that Christ has had his imperial friends in all ages: Elizabeth Christina, Queen of Prussia; Maria Feodorovna, Queen of Russia; Marie, Empress of France; Helena, the imperial mother of Constantine; Arcadia, from her great fortunes building public baths in Constantinople and toiling for the alleviation of the masses; Queen Clotilda, leading her husband and 3,000 of his armed warriors to Christian baptism; Elizabeth, of Burgundy, giving her jeweled glove to a beggar and scattering great fortunes among the distressed; Prince Albert, singing "Rock of Ages" in Windsor Castle, and Queen Victoria incognito reading the Scriptures to a dying pauper. I bless God that the day is coming when royalty will bring all its thrones and music, all its harmonies and painting, all its pictures and sculpture, all its statuary and architecture; and the queens of the earth, in long line of advance, frankincense filling the air and the camels laden with gold, shall approach Jerusalem, and the gates shall be hoisted, and the great burden of splendor shall be lifted into the palace of this greater than Solomon.

Again, my subject teaches me what is earnestness in the search of truth. Do you know where Sheba was? It was in Abyssinia, or some say in the southern part of Arabia Felix. In either case it was a great way off from Jerusalem. To get from there to Jerusalem she had to cross a country infested with bandits, and go across blistering deserts. Why did not the Queen of Sheba stay at home and send a committee to inquire about this new religion, and have the delegates report in regard to that religion and the wealth of King Solomon? She wanted to see for herself, and hear for herself. She could not do this by work of committee. She felt she had a soul ...

Hardened Liver.

Five years ago I broke down with kidney and liver complaint and rheumatism.

Since then I have been unable to be about at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were puffed up and filled with water.

All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters; I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case, otherwise I would have been now in my grave.

It's a [illegible] administration, remember. [illegible] has returned?

Business men on the Pacific coast have good reason for their disgust with the new "reform" administration at Washington. Mails to China and the East now go every twenty days instead of every ten days as under the Republican administration. This is only one of many "reforms."

The Democratic administration has been sending to Europe for advice as to what shall be its policy on the money question. Better that than nothing. It is in need of some advice from some quarter. But whether or not the advice which it is likely to get should be followed is another matter.

The President and Secretaries Manning and Whitney gave $1,000 each to the [illegible] fund in New York. [illegible] Assistant Secretary Fairchild added $500 and Private Secretary Lamont $[illegible]—total, $4,000. If Republican officials had contributed to their party even $10 to $25 each, they would be instantly bounced as offensive partisans.

The Congressional vacation is the longest possible between two Congresses under the Constitution, unless such an extra session [illegible] the [illegible] Congress be [illegible] the fourth of March. December will come in on Tuesday, consequently the first Monday will be the 7th day of that month. [illegible]

TERRIBLE MARINE DISASTER.

The Propeller Algoma Lost With Thirty Lives.

On the [illegible] the propeller Algoma, a [illegible] steamer, costing over $[illegible], struck a reef near Port Arthur, in Lake Superior, and went to pieces. Thirty [illegible] were lost. The captain, [illegible] passengers and a few deck hands were saved.

Profound sorrow is caused along the north shore of Lake Superior at the loss of the Algoma, whose officers were highly esteemed. Captain Moore has terribly crushed and bruised. The cabin fell on him and crushed him, so that he is [illegible]. The first and second mates as well as the rescued passengers show in their drawn and strained features, the traces of the awful battle with the waves. The purser who was lost, A. Mackenzie, is a nephew of the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, and was a very popular man. Captain Moore, say the rescued passengers, was brave and cool and did his duty like a man. When it seemed certain death to [illegible], he seized a rope and strung it along the deck, telling the panic stricken passengers to hold to it. From 5 o'clock till daybreak they clung to the rope, while the waves dashed over them, carrying away one after another from the life-rope. While he was watching and caring for the passengers the cabin crashed down on the brave captain and pinned him to the deck. He cried out, "I am done for now, but what will become of these poor people?" Several determined men made an attempt to swim through the surf to the land. Only three landed. The others were hurled against the rocks with tremendous force and mangled beyond recognition. The vessel's stern was gradually crowded towards the shore till it rested solid, and in it the two passengers and crew huddled with a few blankets and waited for the storm to subside. As they watched the waves tearing along the [illegible] and breaking the bulwarks in pieces, the captain said: "Men let us unite in prayer," and with death staring them in the face, said the passenger, "we knelt down and the captain [illegible]."

Murder in Michigan.

We find in a [illegible] contemporary some criminal figures which the citizens [illegible] about. They [illegible] the form of a statement of the number of murders and assaults with intent to kill in eight states for three months of the present year, and they show that in those states in which capital punishment exists the percentage of murderous assaults is much less than in Michigan. And this is true even of Texas, a state in which murder is commonly supposed to be an every day occupation of some citizens. There five murders occurred in the three months as against six in Michigan, and 11 assaults with intent to kill as against 20 in our own state.

It is pointed out that in Ohio also, with its larger population and its desperate districts unlike anything in Michigan, there were only four murders and 12 deadly assaults in the same time.

There is a terrible significance in these facts which sentimentalism cannot extenuate. It is in terrible evidence that human life in Michigan is held more and more cheaply from year to year; that the occasional murder which used to be displayed in the newspapers as a sensation has given place to so many events of the kind that they are now accepted quite as a matter of course. When Michigan makes a worse murder record than Texas it is about time to affect a change. We have faith to believe popular conviction of this fact will force the adoption of capital punishment at the next legislative session, despite the failure to it in the last. [illegible]

Josh Billings made $[illegible] and saved it all by bad spelling. It was not much of an investment but it paid well.

A Modern Grievance.

One of the perplexing features of modern civilization in all large towns and cities are the boys on the streets; not merely the "street boys," but the boys who often leave homes and respectable parents, and who, when turned loose in the streets, make themselves almost as formidable as the Bedouin Arabs in the neighborhood of unarmed caravans.

If they do no serious damage, they commit sufficiently numerous small depredations to make them harmful, exasperating and sometimes dangerous. They break windows, they destroy the gas lamps, they throw snowballs, often loaded with stones, ice or pieces of coal. A boy or girl poorly dressed and pushing a small cart or gathering fuel is often made the target of those missiles. They anger beyond endurance the ashmen and peddlers, the squalor and meagerness of whose equipages excite their derision. They drive away their anatomical horses, upset their carts and follow them with yells, shouts, derision and weapons, when vainly trying to escape their tormentors.

That more of them do not provoke their victims to terrible retaliation is a tribute to the general belief that the boy of the period is not a malicious, but only a wanton, ungoverned and mischievous being—not a wildcat nor even a wolf, but a monkey whose antics are prompted by a rattle-headed craving for excitement and diversion rather than a set purpose to injure or a calculation as to the amount or kind of injury and annoyance his own enjoyment may involve.

But a serious tragedy has just occurred on one of the North River piers in New York which is due entirely to the inability of a man to longer endure the actual torment inflicted upon him by a crowd of boys who hovered about him and stung him like a swarm of bees.

He is a faithful, industrious workman, strictly temperate in his habits, and given strictly to minding his own business. But he has unfortunately a defect in his speech and is afflicted with Saint Vitus' dance. This was enough to arouse the attention of the gangs of boys who hang about the piers, and they were prompt to make the most of the new sport thus providentially thrown upon their tender mercies, which, like the tender mercies of the wicked, are cruel.

They at once began taunting him and annoying him with all conceivable ingenuity, and found exceeding great delight in his eccentric efforts to retort. They finally gave a practical turn to their jesting by throwing snowballs, stones and brickbats, absolutely interfering with the work of this man and his fellow-workmen.

The fusilade of fifty boys may easily be heavy enough to bring great public enterprises to a stand-still, and in this case it put a stop to the loading of coal, which the man was superintending. At last his patience was exhausted, and, going into his canal boat, he brought back his pistol, threatening to shoot unless the assaults of the boys ceased. They did not cease, and he fired, instantly killing a young man engaged at the hoisting rope. The testimony is conflicting as to whether he was concerned in the assault. In any event the killing will probably be held as manslaughter.

The penalty of death will never be allowed as a proper punishment for the misdeeds of these Arabs of the street; but those who know the amount of misery and loss they can inflict will see the necessity of some kind of regulation for them and punishment for their offenses, which shall be recognized as adequate. Unless something of the kind is provided it will begin to be hard to persuade juries to convict a man for turning with desperation and protecting himself at all hazards from what becomes, on account of his helplessness, well nigh intolerable. It is a wrong for which there ought to be somewhere a proper remedy.—Detroit Free Press.

Cossacks and Students.

An incident that occurred at Moscow in December, 1880, affords an apt illustration of the trivial causes from which disorders sometime arise. Prof. Zernoff was giving a lecture on anatomy to an attentive audience, when all at once a loud and unusual noise was heard in the next room, and most of the students ran out to see what had happened. Nothing particular had happened, but the professor, annoyed at the interruption of his lecture, made a complaint to the authorities. The next day it was stated that the complaint had led to the expulsion of several members of the anatomy class. A punishment so severe for an offense so venial kindled general indignation. A meeting was called and a resolution passed calling upon the rector for an explanation. But instead of the rector came the chief of the Moscow police, followed by a great array of gendarmes, Cossacks, and infantry, who ordered the meeting to disperse. The young fellows were now greatly excited, and, though they would have listened to reason, refused obedience to the behests of brute force. On this the aula was surrounded by the soldiers, all the issues were beset, the students to the number of four hundred were taken prisoners, and amid a square of bayonets marched off to jail. Affairs of this sort do not always end with simple arrests. At the least show of resistance the foot soldiers make free use of the butt ends of their muskets, the Cossacks ply their whips, the faces of the students stream with blood, some are thrown wounded to the ground, and there ensues a terrible scene of armed violence and unavailing resistance. It happened thus at Kharkoff, in November, 1878, when some troubles arose from a mere misunderstanding between a professor at the veterinary college and one of his classes, a misunderstanding which a few words of explanation would have sufficed to remove. It was thus at Moscow and St. Petersburg during the disorders of 1861, 1863, and 1866, and in certain circumstances the law sanctions even grosser outrages. In 1878 an enactment, the cruelty of which it is impossible to exaggerate, was promulgated. "Considering," it ran, "the frequency of students' meetings in the universities and public schools, the law concerning seditious gatherings in the streets and other public places is applied to all buildings and establishments used as colleges and superior schools." Thus all students in Russia are placed permanently under martial law. A meeting or group of undergraduates, after being summoned three times to disperse, may be shot down as if they were armed rebels.—Russia Under the Tzars, by Stepniak.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. Trial Bottles of this Great Discovery for Consumption free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Credit is due the German women and physicians for first using Red Clover blossoms as a medicine. Best results are obtained when combined with other medicinal roots and herbs, as in Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which is the best known remedy for all blood diseases, stomach and liver troubles, pimples, costiveness, bad breath, piles, ague and malaria diseases, indigestion, loss of appetite, low spirits, headache and all diseases of the kidneys. Price 50 cents, of Druggists.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c per box by Dr. G. W. Crouter and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THE best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

MACHINE
--AND-- BOILER
WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinest; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

Patti's First Stage Dress.

When Adelina Patti was a child she often sat on the lap of Mme. Lauza, who now lives at 102 Third avenue, New York. "She is her mother's image," said Mme. Lauza to a reporter for the World of that city, "and has many of her ways. The diva was born at Madrid, and is 42 years old this summer. I knew the whole family intimately when they came to reside at Milan. Mme. Barelli, the mother of the great singer, had been married before and had four children, two of whom are still living. Her relations with her first husband were said to be very unhappy, but that was before I knew them. The little woman was of a very intense nature, all fire and flame, yet not without her gentler moods, when she was very charming and loveable. As a child Adeline was extremely like the mother, could give way to sudden bursts of passion, which were as quickly over, though not apparently regretted, and then she would become most affectionate and show a sweetness of disposition which it is a joy to me yet to remember."

"Who was her first teacher?"

"That child was born to sing, and she could not have made her life different had she tried. She needed few lessons, singing as natural as a nightingale between the pauses of the wind. Her half-brother, E. Barelli, who, I think, is still living in Philadelphia, gave her the few lessons she needed. It was a light and pleasant task for both teacher and pupil. Musical knowledge seemed to come to her without any effort of her own, and like a bird she did her work unbidden. When she was 7 years old we came to this country about the same time and renewed our acquaintance in this city. I did sewing, and was sometimes engaged by Mme. Barelli to make over her dresses and make new ones for the children—Carlotta, Amelia, Adelina, and another that died very young. Adelina first made her appearance on any stage when she was 8 years of age, and it was in this city. I cannot recall where she sang, but I know it was at a concert. That was thirty-four years ago. Well, her mother wanted me to make the dress which she was to wear, and I did. It was of white silk, very pretty, with a few trimmings, and set off her round little figure well. I shall never forget the day I took it to her and she tried it on. Nothing would please her, and the dress was especially bad, and I was the hatefulest old thing in the world. She cried with vexation, the sweet little rebel, because it did not fit her as she thought, and was what is called 'poky.' We tried to convince her that it was lovely and couldn't be made better. It was no use. She tore it off, flung it on the floor and jumped on it with a childish anger that was laughable. But she had to wear it all the same. She sang in it and made a hit. The price of that dress was $37. I called with the bill a couple of times, but was not paid. I have that bill yet, though it is thirty-four years since I gave up trying to collect it. Patti has forgotten about the dress her mother ordered and it will never be paid for. The memory that I made it for such a singer is enough for me."

A Miner's Dream.

A party of Cheyennese, who are old-timers and have seen cities grow on the plains and the mountain sides and by the rivers, and who have very little to show for it, except memories of auld lang syne, were sitting around a table in a back room, last night, talking about what they had done and what they would like to do.

"I wish I had that drawer full of gold twenties," said one of them. "Not the little drawer; that big one on the other side."

"What would you do with it?" asked another.

"Do with it? Why, I'd retire," he replied.

"Retire from what?" savagely asked yet another.

"Well, I don't know exactly; I'd just sorter retire, as it were."

"Yes, you'd retire to the gold-room, or somewhere, and come back here in about three weeks asking me to set 'em up. That's the way you'd retire."

"No, I wouldn't, either, for I'd know you wouldn't do it; otherwise you'd set 'em up now."

That was a clincher, and the other man did "set 'em up."

"Now," said the first man—the one who wanted the twenties—after the refreshments had arrived. "Now, the fact is that if I had all the money I could use, I'd hunt me up a valley in Wyoming, where the land is good and the water plenty, and I'd build a little town, and on one block I'd put a fine row of tenements for all my friends to live in, and the middle house should be a splendid theatre, which would do for a church on Sundays, and I'd have a railroad to the town and let her grow. We'd all start in on equal footing, and the first fellow who got so rich that he felt himself above the other fellows, I'd fire him out of town and let him make a fresh start some place else, and ——"

"Oh, hush, that ain't natural," said Arthur; "money will make a beggar think he was born in a castle, and he'll get a coat of arms off a fruit-can, or something of the sort, and swear that he inherited it inside of ten years. Your town's busted already, old man."

"Well, the fact is, I haven't built it yet," said the castle-constructor, "but the truth is that if I had even money enough to set 'em up now again, I'd do it."

Somebody else had, and the stimulants appeared once more, and by the time the party broke up all of them were as rich as they wanted to be and voted unanimously that nothing succeeds like success, and this morning they will feel as if they had succeeded in securing a head which will require them to have a shoe-horn to get their hats on good.—Cheyenne Leader.

Leaders.

The Cid, expiring as the Moors drew near,
Directed that his effects should lead
His corpse to battle mounted on the steed
He rode through all the storm of his career.
They did. Wherever lowered that chieftain dear,
For victory there was no other need.
The foe's proud front was broken like a reed
And he was scattered in a gale of fear.
So, like that Arthur of romantic Spain,
Though dead, the lofty ones of all the ages
Still lead us o'er the world's vast battle-plain,
Upon the faithful steeds of history's pages;
And, by their presence, daily and sustain,
Whilst the great war 'twixt Truth and Error rages.
—Franklin E. Denton, in The Current.

A splendid diamond, weighing some 475 carats, has recently been found in southern Africa. The "Grand Mogul," the property of the Shah of Persia, weighs only 280 carats. The "Chief," the "Regent," the "Koh-i-noor," are all much below that weight. The wonderful stone is to be polished in Amsterdam.

FROM WASHINGTON.

THE Director of the Mint in his recent annual report estimated the production of the world to have been during the calendar year, gold, [illegible], and silver, circulated in most cases at its coin value, $115,000,000. This is an increase of about $1,000,000 on the production of 1883 of gold, and a falling off of about the same amount in silver.

THE President has set aside Thursday, November 26, as Thanksgiving Day.

DURING October the total coinage of the mints was $5,250,108, of which $2,500,000 was in standard dollars.

THE public-debt statement for October is as follows: Total debt (including interest), $1,270,874,119; cash in Treasury, $487,[illegible]; debt, less amount in Treasury, $782,579,621. Decrease during October, $12,[illegible]. Decrease since June 30, 1884, $91,071,281.

SUMMER'S DECAY.

When my first roses shed
Their petals, and lay dead,
I knew my life [illegible]
Had struck at my sweet day
Of Summer breath and bloom.
I heard my knell of doom
In the [illegible] sighing breeze
That scattered their dead leaves.

And then and there I seemed
To see as one who dreamed
A long procession pass
Across the springing grass—
Sweet [illegible] of the dead flowers
That bloomed in last year's bowers,
And stately at the head,
All clad in white and red,

Shedding their dewy scent,
My fair June darlings went;
And following after slept
My lilies, who had kept
Their garments white as snow,
While their warm hearts did glow
With all the golden fire
That summer suns inspire.

All blooms and blossoms fair
Followed and followed there,
[illegible]
White as the snow, and cold,
My pale chrysanthemums [illegible];
And then I knew, alas!
The end had come; and knew,
While still the warm winds blew

My darlings of to-day
Like this were on their way
To join the ghostly throng;
Like this would move along,
Pale visions, dead and dear,
To haunt another year.
Shuddering, I moaned and wept,
And in that moment crept

Shadows of storm and night
Across my [illegible] light.
"What is my summer pride?"
Moaning I wept and cried,
"Why do I hold my way,
If only to decay?"
Then suddenly I heard
Amid my boughs a bird

Lifting a Heavenly voice:
"Rejoice, and yet rejoice,"
He sang; and sang again:
"[illegible] earth-bound pain,
[illegible] of this dread decay,
I lift my Heavenly lay."
Higher and higher still,
Sweet with a sweeter thrill,

Lifted that Heavenly song,
Borne on its wings along,
I saw the bloom and birth
Of the new Heaven and earth,
And all my flowery host,
Each sweet, departing ghost,
Seemed in my ears to sing,
"So fair and beauteous thing,
Nothing of precious cost,
Nothing we love is lost."

A ROMANCE OF JAPAN.

Karuka, the Savior of His Country, and His "Eta" Bride.

[illegible]

...those ladies carried with them when they went abroad, and half resolved to rush into the house and slay this common O Hana who had stepped in between her and her love.

But she thought that deliberate revenge would be better than sudden outrage, and [illegible]. The next day she sent a servant down to inquire about O Hana's people. The answer came that they were Etas—the pariahs of Japanese society, despised and insulted by the very beggars, the lowest of the low—a tribe who live distinct from all others, and whose business it is to execute criminals, kill animals, and to make clogs and sandals.

"So," muttered O Kiri, "this will be pretty news for the city, that the head of the great Karuka family loves an Eta woman! This is pleasant for me to see, that I, in whose veins runs the blood of the Immortals, am set aside in favor of a common outcast wench! It will be sufficient to proclaim his connection to disgrace him, but I want more than disgrace, I want and will have revenge."

But she determined to have a practical proof at home of his affection for O Hana before resorting to extremes. So she desired her father to call on Karuka in state, knowing that in the course of a week Karuka would be obliged to return the visit. Then she sent a servant to O Hana's shop to command her to bring for inspection a number of the best black lacquered clogs in preparation for the New Year's festivities. So O Hana's father brought the clogs up the next day, but O Kiri abused him for daring to come into the presence of a lady, and commanded him to send a woman to wait upon a lady. Three times accordingly O Hana came, but as Karuka did not happen to be there O Kiri made some excuse and ordered alterations in order that the lovers should be thrown together.

So when Karuka came to repay the visit, O Kiri had so contrived that her clog woman should be announced. Karuka came in state, with his kami shimo or winged coat on, his armor-bearer and a score of retainers bearing his crest, the double-triangle, embroidered on his sleeves.

When O Hana was announced, O Kiri expressed great anger that a common tradeswoman should dare to interrupt a state visit, but Karuka laughed out of compliment, and O Hana entered. Directly she beheld Karuka she uttered a cry and sank on the mats. Karuka's face turned ghastly pale; he staggered as he saw that O Kiri's eyes were fixed on him.

"Dear me, Sir Karuka!" exclaimed O Kiri, with affected concern, what is the matter? You start as if you had seen a spirit!"

An Editor's Politeness.

A yellow-backed pirate named Jim Cummings who works for Sam Hardacre near Millville, came to town last Saturday, and, while drunk at Creswell's grocery, made some remarks about ourselves as we were passing up street with our youngest daughter. He was soured because we turned him over two weeks ago and his crowd, that took the lynchpins out of old man Parson's buggy at the Goose Creek meeting. When he spoke his insulting froth Hamberts Davis took it up, and in a row which followed he struck the gorilla a sutbinder on the jaw which knocked him out from between his wool suspenders and loosened six of his teeth. He had Davis arrested by Marshal Billings, and the Mayor levied a fine of ten dollars, which we paid for him as soon as we learned the facts. We intend to show up the whisky yahoos from the Goose Creek neighborhood who try to run this town Saturdays; and, by the way, Han Davis is a candidate for Town Marshal. [illegible]

GRANT VS. JOHNSON.

How the Great General Saved the Country from the Fickle Tailor [illegible].

The discussion over the recent letter of Chauncey M. ANOTHER DEMOCRATIC SCHEME

Efforts of the Bourbons to Secure Control of the United States Supreme Court.

Judging from the letters of inquiry which reach the Blade from various points of the country, there is a strong current of belief that the Democrats are looking to the possibility of obtaining control of the Supreme Court of the United States, with the design of having the constitutional amendments adopted since the war declared invalid. Fortunately for the country, the contingency of Democratic control is exceedingly remote, unless the Democratic party shall obtain a majority in the United States Senate, and add to the number of Justices on the Supreme bench, so as to give a Democratic majority.

The Supreme Court now is composed of the following members, whose ages and years of appointment are also tabulated:

	Age.	Appointed.
Chief Justice M. R. Waite	[illegible]	1874
Samuel F. Miller	[illegible]	1862
Stephen J. Field	[illegible]	1863
Joseph P. Bradley	72	1870
John M. Harlan	[illegible]	1877
William B. Woods	61	1880
Stanley Matthews	[illegible]	1881
Horace Gray	[illegible]	1881
Samuel Blatchford	[illegible]	1882

Eight of these are Republicans; one—Justice Field—is a Democrat. To give a Democratic majority in the court will require the death or retirement of four members. The law provides that any Justice who has been ten years on the bench and arrived at the age of seventy years, may, if he so desire, retire on full salary. There is no compulsion about it. He can remain until death, if he prefers. Of these nine gentlemen, Justice Bradley is the only one eligible for retirement at present, while Waite, Field and Miller will be eligible within the coming year. Should these four all retire in 1886, and their places be filled with Democrats, the court would stand five Republicans and four Democrats—and, unless death removed a Republican, would so remain during Cleveland's entire term.

There does not seem to be any probability, however, that any of the three Republicans of the four Justices eligible for retirement will [illegible]

Mancelona has a new postmaster in the person of Eugene Savage. Savage is a "warmed-over" Democrat, while Mr. Handy the retiring postmaster, was a Union soldier.

Capt. Sandy Bennett left Traverse City lately for La Grange, Ga., where he will spend the winter.

J. S. Coffman, the Petoskey jeweler, has leased a store on Canal street, opposite Sweet's Hotel, Grand Rapids, and will remove his business there about Dec. 1.

The Traverse City L. L. A. now have 1,200 books in their catalogue—own their library building, and public hall, and are in a flourishing financial condition.

The postmaster at Boyne City thus notifies us: R. E. Sampson, "Gone where the woodbine twineth," "Skipped for unknown parts."—Petoskey Democrat.

J. M. Ashley has been at Cadillac again, and now you will hear railroad talk for the next two weeks.

It is said Mr. Silkman will buy hardwood lumber at Yuba the coming winter.

Jake Phelps, of Benzonia, raised at the rate of 800 bushels of potatoes to the acre, but the report does not give the size of the plat.

It is estimated that Cross Village, Petoskey, Pine Lake and South Arm have deposited about 60,000 bushels of potatoes in Chicago and Milwaukee markets, thus far this season.

The good people of Banks and over the line gave Wallace Bingham a wood bee recently. He is slowly recovering from a stroke of paralysis which came upon him while he was plowing.

Hon. Perry Hannah, of Traverse City, in view of his contemplated winter's absence in Europe, has resigned his position upon the board of building commissioners of the Northern Asylum, and T. Bates has been appointed to fill the vacancy thus caused.

Hon. C. L. Fraser, of Petoskey, goes to Florida next week, and will made that his future home.

Partridges are reported so thick between Petoskey and Mackinaw that they cant get out of the way of the cars, but are killed in large numbers as trains pass along.

A. W. Olds, Bear Lake lumberman, the Statesman says, is going into the business on a large scale this winter. He has already contracted for 5,000 cords of wood and 5,000,000 feet of logs. Choppers and sawyers are making the woods of Bear Lake resound with the merry music of their axes and saws. The probabilities are that he will extend his operations before spring and get out a much greater quantity of logs and wood than he now has contracts for.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT.

Returns for November as Received at Lansing.

For the Michigan crop report for November, the Secretary of State has received reports from 893 correspondents, representing 601 townships; 600 of these returns are from 406 townships. In the southern four tiers of counties the weight of measured bushels of the wheat crop of 1885 is 100 per cent of the full weight, or 60 pounds. The area of seeded wheat this fall in the southern four tiers of counties is 101 per cent., and in northern counties 102 per cent., of area seeded in 1884, indicating a present acreage in the southern counties of 1,376,259 acres, and in northern counties 222,664 acres. The condition of wheat Nov. 1 was 96, the comparison being with the vitality and growth of average years. Compared with 1884 there is a decrease of one tenth in area of clover seed harvested, and five per cent. in yield per acre. The acreage in potatoes this year is not quite as large as in 1884, and the yield per acre 15 to 20 per cent. less than in that year. A few fields in the State have been plowed up or abandoned because of rot, but in many localities, and especially where grown on sandy soil, the crop has suffered little injury from this cause.

Rot is reported by 161 correspondents in the southern four tiers of counties, representing every county in this section excepting Branch and Cass, and by seventy-one correspondents representing nineteen counties in the northern section of the state. The total loss by rot will amount to one fifth of the crop.

The yield of corn in southern counties is 32 bushels per acre, and in northern counties 28 bushels per acre.

The bridge has been covered its entire length with three inch plank.

It is reported that the steamer Van Raalte will winter at this place.

It is rumored that Col. Wisner will erect a new hotel in South Arm in the spring.

We understand a cut-off is being made on the road from this place to Boyne Falls which will shorten the distance two or three miles.

Current Events.

H. B. Claflin, the New York merchant prince, is dead.

The British government has declared war against Burmah, and an expeditionary force has entered Burmese territory.

Among the first important measures to come before Congress at the coming session, will be one for the admission of Washington Territory into the Union of States.

On the 13th the city of Galveston, Tex., was almost entirely destroyed by fire. Fifty-two blocks were burned over, and over $1,500,000 worth of property destroyed.

A number of gentleman from different parts of the country who believe that it would add to the prosperity of the United States to have England do our manufacturing met in Chicago last week and adopted some resolutions to that effect. In other words, they held a Free Trade meeting.

Servia has declared war against Bulgaria, and active preparations for hostilities are going forward in both countries. Later—The Servian army crossed the Bulgarian frontier on the 14th. They met with no resistance in crossing. But soon sharp fighting occurred, and many were killed on both sides. The Bulgarians retreated at all points. The whole Servian army is now in Bulgarian territory.

A recent dispatch gives ground for grave apprehensions of a repetition of the recent troubles in the Northwest. It says: "There is little doubt that the spring will see a serious outbreak. An alliance has been made between the Indian tribes who labor under want of sustenance and provisions. If Reil is hanged it will make the matter more serious still, as the French Canadians will add fuel to the flame.

The religious revival at the Roman Catholic church in Kalamazoo is marvelous. Immense throngs attend the four and five services each day. People come from Paw Paw, South Haven, Mendon, Otsego, and many other places. A great many of young and old are being added to the church. Three hundred received communion on the 15th. Bishop Borgess is in attendance. The awakening is fairly pentecostal.

The latest reports from the scene of the wreck of the Algoma, indicate that fully 100 lives were lost. There were without doubt 116 persons on board the steamer, including the crew, and thus far but 15 have been accounted for. The boats owners show reluctance in giving details, and refuse to say, if they know, how many lives were lost. It is thought that a large number of people shipped on the ill-fated steamer at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Freeman killed a deer on Saturday, which was sold to Mr. Jeffries of Charlevoix.

The Gospel Temperance meeting on Friday evening was a success—a large crowd and interesting time—another in two weeks.

The Pioneer House is full of boarders again.

Ed Sowles is moving his wagon shop to Frizzell's black-smith shop.

Hugh McGonnigal got his foot badly burned on hot iron, Thursday.

Mr. Bedwin who was prostrated with a third stroke of paralysis has recovered.

—Seventeen impressions per minute on the SENTINEL steam power press Monday night. We shall make it twenty.

—Neckachickame, chief of the Chippewas, has bought forty acres of land on the Mackinaw division of the Michigan Central.

—Note the change in the advertisement of Bradbeer the photographer. If you want your picture taken this winter now is the time to get it.

—McLeod is Deputy U. S. Marshal, but he knocks down a "beef critter" and slices a round steak with the same sang froid that he did in days of yore.

—The freight business of the G. R. & I. railroad company has increased to such proportions that the company has difficulty in furnishing the necessary rolling stock to handle it.

—Mrs. L. E. Allen returned from her Ohio visit yesterday.

—The Western Union Telegraph office has been refitted and much improved.

—Dave Bradbeer will pass the winter at Big Rapids manufacturing his late patents.

—Hon. B. M. Cutcheon, member of Congress, from this district, leaves for Washington to-day.

—Chas. Lamereaux, John Cooper and Mr. McIntosh, the two latter of Marion, brought in five deer last week.

—Stockman & Iddings issue a circular letter to their customers. It will be found on our first page. Look it over carefully.

—Upright & Emery will operate extensively in the Pine Lake region for Mueller, Christy & Raber, the coming winter.

—Another offensive partisan gone. Phillip H. Badour, of the Statesman, has been removed from the Boyne postoffice, and Frank M. Abraham appointed to his place.

—The steam furniture and agate works of Horton & Budd, on Bridge street, have an advertisement in this issue. They have good facilities for doing good work, and doing it promptly.

—John O'Neill has bought two lots of E. M. Clark on the north side of the harbor, extending back to the street. He will remove his fishery to the harbor front and ultimately build a residence on the street.

—The SENTINEL now has the most extensive and best assortment of poster type in Northern Michigan, and likewise the best facilities for doing job work of any establishment between Traverse City and the Straits.

—District No. 2 of Charlevoix Township, has an overseer of highways who fills the bill. Mr. Wood has done good work on the roads out of Charlevoix this season, and has made every dollar of the highway tax count for all it is worth.

—Mr. Nerton of Horton's Bay, is critically ill

—Mr. Dart, the well known Petoskey attorney was in town Wednesday.

—Remember the Thanksgiving service at the Congregational church, tomorrow.

—The new ten cent special delivery stamps are becoming known as the p.d.q's.

—A petition is being circulated praying for a daily mail between Charlevoix and East Jordan.

—Owing to ill health Miss Mate Cooper has resigned her position as teacher in the East Jordan schools.

—Sheriff C. R. Pratt of Emmet county, has received the appointment of Deputy U. S. Marshall in and for that district.

—H. Lee Iddings left Monday upon a ten days' visit in Albion. He listens to Canon Farrar at Ann Arbor this evening.

—A rare treat is in store for all who hear Judge Rice's lecture on Abraham Lincoln at the Congregational church on Friday evening.

—"Tom" Kelley writes that he is enjoying life in Grand Rapids. Upon the completion of the soldiers home he will become a worthy occupant.

—The new Emmet county court house will be located east of the Methodist church at Harbor Springs. It will be 32 x62 feet, and two stories high, with an 85 foot tower.

—Mr. J. H. Boss is making preparations for a trip to Florida. If this thing keeps on Charlevoix and Petoskey will have as large a delegation in Florida for the winter as any towns of their size in the country.—Petoskey Record.

—We are led to believe that Phil. Badour the hustler of the Boyne City Statesman is making arrangements for an enlargement of his paper to a six column folio. Hold on! Phil., until after the first Monday in April. We hope she will, but suppose Boyne City does'nt "get thar."—Record.

—Yesterday the S. H. Davis & Co's. fish tugs, the Sea Wing and Fisherman, with their outfits were taken from here and transferred to other fishing grounds. They went from here to St. Ignace, and it is expected that they will fish the balance of the season on the north shore. They are expected, however, to return here for spring and summer fishing.

—John N. Broadfoot will, we understand, be located here this winter and next summer, as manager of the wood and lumber business of Gunderson & Barker, of Chicago. Mr. Downer, who has so acceptably managed their business in these waters for the past few years, will be transferred to another field, probably the shipping points in Emmet county.

—Hon. Perry Hannah and wife and daughter, Miss Claribel, of Traverse City, will leave in about two weeks and sail on the 12th of December for Europe. They will be accompanied by Mrs. D. A. Blodgett and daughter, Miss Susie, of Grand Rapids. The party will remain in Paris until after the holidays and then go south, into Italy, where they will remain until spring, returning home in April or May.

—Dealers in holiday goods have reason to expect a lively trade in that line this season, in view of the fair prospects for renewed business activity; and the way to make large sales is to advertise in a specially liberal and attractive manner. The SENTINEL is the best medium in the Pine Lake region through which to advertise holiday gifts. Its large circulation is not buncomb, but an established fact, easily demonstrated to any of our patrons who choose to call in and examine our bats.

—A special dispatch from Negaunee says: "The newly created county of Iron, on the Menominee iron range, which was taken from Marquette county last spring, seems to contain a pretty bad lot of citizens. There are only four townships and four thousand people in it, but in one township alone it was proposed to raise $30,000 taxes. The county officers have been summoned to Lansing to explain the cause for their actions. Flanigan, clerk of Iron River Township, assaulted McRae, clerk of Bales Township, a few days ago because McRae charged him with attempting bribery. The outcome of the whole matter will be difficult to predict, but it looks decidedly as though nearly all the county and township officers would serve terms of various length in the State penal institutions.

—It is so seldom that our more or less esteemed contemporary ventures an opinion that when it does it would naturally be expected to speak the truth. It reiterates its charges of incompetency and even crookedness against the Charlevoix county Board of Supervisors and closes by saying that it expects it will bring down upon itself the wrath of the Board. Well yes, quite likely. There is nothing particularly enticing to an honest conscientious man in being called either a fool or a rascal. We have again interviewed a member of the committee on claims and received his reiterated statement that the said Committee carefully examined and checked the vouchers to the orders paid by the County clerk, and that the statement of our ... wide awake contemporary ...

—O. I. Wheat leaves Friday for a holiday visit among friends in southern Michigan.

—Ten Charlevoix people are pursuing the Chautauqua course, four of whom will graduate next year.

—It is said that the telegraph company has thrown up its line running into Bellaire, because of non support.

—Jas Washburn reports that chicken thieves are abroad, and that he sustained a loss of fourteen pullets last week.

—Several Kalamazoo merchants have substituted oil lamps for gas in lighting their stores and are pleased with the change.

—The soldiers' home commission on the 19th. at Grand Rapids, located a building place and cemetery. The home is to be opened January 17th.

—Frankfort.—The principal of the school has been retired for incompetency and lack of government, and there is a good opening for the right sort of a teacher.

—It may not be generally known that A. J. McLeod has one of the best equipped slaughter houses in this part of the country. It is located on Miller's creek, a mile south of the village.

—R. W. Bagot, of Elk Rapids, took the train at this point last Tuesday, for Florida, where he goes to spend the winter. Mr. Bagot has, for several years wintered in Florida and speaks highly of the climate there.—Eagle.

—Capt. Lucas, the well known coat liveryman of Petoskey has just placed an order with Jos. Beauvais for four elegant row boats for use in his Petoskey livery. In speaking of Mr. Beauvais' boats Capt Lucas says: "They are the best modelled boats I ever saw."

—The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad have just turned out of their shops at Grand Rapids, an elegant open excursion passenger car for use in their northern resort business next season. It is constructed on the same plan as the open cars, and is beautifully decorated.

—If any person lays the flattering unction to his soul that because the Democrats have the offices they are going to capture Charlevoix county, he will wake up some time and find that he has been either drunk or laboring under a delusion. The same remarks may be made with equal force concerning the State and country at large.

—Although E. R. Savage has been appointed postmaster at Mancelona, yet the postoffice fight has in reality but just begun, as his appointment has caused almost universal dissatisfaction to both Democrats and Republicans. Letters and telegrams are already pouring into the postoffice department at Washington in favor of Mr. Layman, and the contest bids fair to be a warm one.

—Record: Mr. J. S. Coffman has sold his business to Will. Z. Searle who formerly worked for him, and who is well known here as a most excellent young man, and a good workman. Mr. Coffman goes this week to Grand Rapids with his household goods to set his house in order. Mrs. Coffman and children will follow next week. It will seem odd to many old citizens when the stalwart proportions of "Joe" are no longer seen looming up on Lake street pavements.

—Whatever may have been said in the past concerning politico-judicial matters in the 13th Circuit, no one can deny the fact that Hon. J. G. Ramsdell has, during his present judicial term proven himself more than ever a wise and upright judge. His ability as a jurist was long ago established, but the reprehensible system of making judicial campaigns synonymous with ordinary politics in all its turbulent features, has in the past caused many things to be said that should not be said of a judge. Judge Ramsdell has renewed the proof of his eminent fitness for the judicial office.

—There is much cause for encouragement in the local business outlook for the coming winter. The usual stringency which always precedes "tax gathering" will of course be experienced to some extent in early winter, but we are of the opinion that January will show an easier monetary circulation. Charlevoix will, from that month forward, afford a grain market, and the bountiful supply of that commodity awaiting transfer will make itself felt. Added to this the fact that the old wood and kindred articles of shipment is well cleared up, a lively activity is expected in getting out next season's supply for the Chicago and Milwaukee shippers interested hereabouts, as well as the product of local shippers. The Pine Lake Iron Company intend to produce a large supply of charcoal wood, and the mills are putting themselves in shape to supply their plants largely. But there is no more certain indication of what we predict than the generally improved feeling among business men regarding financial matters, and the plainly apparent easing up of the stringency under which business seems to have been laboring for some time. The mercantile agency's daily reports all indicate returning confidence and renewed activity. There is encouragement in the atmosphere and good grounds for cheerfulness over ...

Thanksgiving Services.

Union Thanksgiving services will be held at the Congregational Church on Thursday, at 10:30 a. m., Sermon by Rev. J. T. Iddings. Business men and all occupations are requested to close their places of business and trade from 10 o'clock a. m. to 2 o'clock p. m.

A new clock is to be presented to the usual hour next Sunday morning.

Rev. C. F. Van Auken will preach at the M. E. Church in Ironton next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

All members of the Congregational church are requested to be present next Thursday evening at the prayer meeting.

Sale of the Bridge Street House.

The Bridge Street House has been purchased of Robert Miller by M. J. Stockman, E. Carpenter and Henry Cooper are to-day inventorying the furniture preparatory to the transfer. The hotel may be closed this winter. Robert Miller, the retiring landlord, has made himself very popular with the patrons of the house, and his retirement will be generally regretted.

Historical Society.

The Historical Society met last Friday evening in the parlors of C. Y. Cook. The program was opened with a guitar duett by Miss Maud Loveday and Al. Washburn, which was followed by a select reading by R. W. Kane—a German legend, entitled, "Munchausen and the Player." After a vocal solo with guitar accompaniment by Al Washburn, Dr. J. A. Carlstain gave a continuation of his lecture on "Napoleon," which was listened to with marked attention. Miss Maud Loveday closed the exercises with a fine guitar solo. The Society, instead of holding a parlor meeting this week, will listen to a lecture by Hon. J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, at the Congregational Church. All are invited. Subject, "Abraham Lincoln."

A Masonic Home for Michigan.

The Michigan Masons have at last inaugurated a movement to establish a Masonic Home, and a valuable site is already selected at Grand Rapids upon which to erect it. A private letter from Mr. ... Watson, of Grand Rapids, one of the Commission, states that an office has been established in that city, and books opened for subscriptions to the fund. Mr. Watson writes very encouragingly of the outlook. The plan is to erect a building at Grand Rapids at a cost not to exceed $30,000, and that the institution be turned over to the Grand Lodge for guardianship and support. Kentucky has such an institution, which has become famous. Michigan has over 30,000 masons. Less than $1.00 per capita, with the assistance which has been voluntarily bestowed by friends outside of the Order, would erect it and a tax on each lodge of 50 cents per capita of their membership, would support it. It is to be a home in the strictest sense of that term, for aged and infirm Masons, and the destitute widows and orphans of Masons, and is an enterprise that calls for the earnest support of every lodge and Mason in Michigan. W. A. Smith, the Master of Charlevoix Lodge, is the agent of the Association here, and will receive subscriptions to the fund.

A TRIP TO THE MOON.

Jacques Courbeaudocq's Wonderful Achievement.

The Lovers—The One Condition—The Mysterious Riddle and its Solution—The Journey—"Saved! Saved!"—The Return—Wedding Bells.

AFTER JULES VERNE.

[Robert D. Brale, in Texas Siftings.]

CHAPTER I.

Jacques Courbeaudocq was a lawyer. He was a criminal lawyer.

It is sometimes difficult to distinguish which is the criminal, and which is the lawyer, but let that pass.

Lawyers are men who collect claims on a five per cent. basis.

You get the five per cent.—the lawyer gets the rest.

Lawyers get more rest than any other class of professional men.

Jacques had red hair.

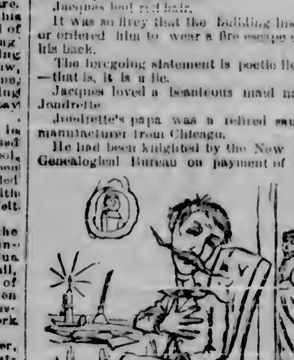
It was so fiery that the building inspector ordered him to wear a fire escape down his back.

The foregoing statement is poetic license—that is, it is a lie.

Jacques loved a beauteous maid named Jondrette.

Jondrette's papa was a retired sausage manufacturer from Chicago.

He had been knighted by the New York Genealogical Bureau on payment of forty dollars.



HIS BEATING HEART.

dollars. The trinity of life to him was his pipe, cheese and beer.

Love for Jondrette caused Jacques' heart to beat wildly from morn to night.

It beat so loudly as to annoy the rest of the boarders.

But by all means let us avoid turning this original romance into a farce.

"I will ask for her hand," said Jacques.

CHAPTER II.

A glorious full moon throws her splendid radiance o'er the palace of Jondrette's papa in Fifth avenue.

The family bull-dog is pouring forth his soul in the back yard.

A young man kneels at the feet of Jondrette's papa. His hand is clasped in the lily-white flipper of Jondrette.

Jondrette is weeping.

In a short space of time she had shed four quarts of tears.

To be more explicit—a gallon.

Nothing would soften the hard heart of the old man.

In vain they threatened to commit suicide and other crimes.

"Will nothing move you, hard heart?" gasped Jacques.

"Yes, Monsieur, she is yours——"

A wild cry of joy broke from the lips of the happy pair, and rang and re-echoed through the awful silence of the dark dungeon—we mean through the richly-furnished apartment. (The fact is we were getting this story mixed with next week's romance, and beg the reader's pardon for the mistake.)

"On one condition," continued the old man, with a scornful laugh.

"Name it," said both, in a breath.

"That you bring me a chunk of the green cheese from which the moon is made, to eat with my beer," said the old man, with a hideous leer.

Jondrette gave a low moan and fell fainting over a King Anne rocking chair.

"I will do it," said Jacques.

CHAPTER III.

For days Jacques fasted nothing.

He pored night and day over works on astronomy.

Memory and appetite alike failed.

He even forgot to charge a client five dollars, under the head of advice, for asking the time on the steps of the City Hall.

One day the title of an old book on an old book-stand caught his eye—"The Moon, by Bjornborg Skjajogbog, the great Norwegian astronomer."

He purchased the book, and fell to devouring it like a madman.

Suddenly a yellow paper fell to the ground.

It bore the following cipher:

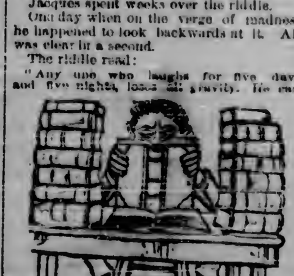
[illegible]

Jacques spent weeks over the riddle.

One day when on the verge of madness he happened to look backwards at it. All was clear in a second.

The riddle read:

"One man who laughs for five days and five nights loses all gravity. He can



ASTRONOMICAL RESEARCH.

swim in space and paddle his way to the moon."

"I shall succeed," said he.

CHAPTER IV.

At noon of the seventeen Fevrier, two persons were ascending on the car of the high elevator at Coney Island.

They were Jacques and a friend.

The friend had had a time friendly misunderstanding with the bank of which he was cashier, and gladly consented to a tour for his health.

The two men had provisions, a huge cheese knife and forty pounds of humorous papers.

When they reached the top of the elevator they looked straight up and commenced to laugh. Then read and laughed, and laughed and read.

People said "they are mad."

For five days and five nights they laughed.

At the end of that time they had to [illegible] Their gravity was completely overcome.

They would float in space.

With a glad shout they sprang out into the ether, and began to paddle like mad men for the moon.

On and on they sped, paying their respects to the Big and Little Bear, the Goat, the Walrus, and other animals in the celestial menagerie. They said to a huge star: "Who are you?"

THE JOURNEY.

"Uranus," was the reply.

"You're another," said they.

At which the stars in their courses groaned in chorus.

The journey is at last over and with a glad cry the voyageurs strike cheese firma.

In a trice Jacques cuts a huge fragment from the surface of the moon, and wraps it in a silk handkerchief.

"Let us descend," said he.

They try. Horrors!!! They can not descend.

Who can describe their horrible situation, hunting for days on the moon's surface for rocks to put in their pockets, to give them weight.

At last their powers fail, and they fall fainting in the sand.

Suddenly a cry rings on the air: "Saved! Saved!! Saved!!!" exclaims Jacques, in a paroxysm of joy. "I have found it."

"What?" gasped his friend.

"A copy of an English comic paper in my vest pocket; we have nothing to do but read the jokes."

RETURNING IN TRIUMPH.

In a few minutes more the adventurers are falling through the air at a frightful rate of speed.

CHAPTER V.

The foreman is yelling for copy, and we shall have to condense this last chapter.

THE END.

The Farmer's Triumph.

"Did you get any diplomas at the fair," asked Deacon Dogwood of Farmer Furrow.

"N-n-no, not yet," he replied, with a faint effort to look cheerful; "I'm in a sort of a bad fix."

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Well, I had some fine oats on exhibition, and the jockeys took 'em for horse feed; my old woman had a crazy quilt there, and the durned rascals used it for a horse blanket. Sal had some of her best fruit there, but the judges ate it all up. Of course, I kicked up a row, and they said they'd give me a diploma to hush the matter up."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A Liberal Physician.

Anxious Wife—I always have had faith in you, doctor, but you don't seem to grasp Mrs. Hobbs' case this time.

Physician—My dear woman, you can't effect a thing in a moment. All we can do is to administer the medicine and wait for it to do its work.

Anxious Wife—Dr. Saws came to see me this morning. He's a specialist, you know, and wants to take hold of the case. Moreover, he assured me he would carry it through to a successful termination.

Physician—Well, I don't like to see you imposed upon in this way, Mrs. Hobbs, and I wouldn't give up the case now for a good deal. I will not only guarantee to do as much as Dr. Saws offers to do, but I'll bury Mr. Hobbs into the bargain.—Tid-Bits.

Balanced.

"What are you doing down town at this time of night?" asked one pedestrian of another in front of the City Hall at ten o'clock the other night.

"Been working at my books down at the office."

"What ailed 'em?"

"My cash account wouldn't balance. Old Smith was looking over the books this afternoon, and he said he'd give me till to-morrow noon to see that cash balanced cash-on-hand account."

"Can you find the error?"

"Oh, I've found it and made everything balance. I brought $39.65 down from the house, you know."—Detroit Free Press.

A Difference in Tastes.

Pompano—Why do you work so hard, Bagley? You slave from morning until night.

Bagley—I know I do. I wish to get rich. I want to die worth a million.

Pompano—Well, there's no accounting for tastes. Now, I would much prefer to live worth half a million.—Philadelphia Call.

In a Critical Condition.

Minister (just before church service)—How is our worthy brother, Deacon Smith, getting on, Doctor?

Physician—He is in a very critical condition. I was at his house three times yesterday and once this morning.

Minister (with concern)—Indeed! I will ask the prayers of the congregation in his behalf.—N. Y. Sun.

A Confab in the Nursery.

"Why, Lucy, see how Ivory doll's head's cracked."

"It fell from the bath-room window. I'm afraid information of the brain will set in."

"Insanities me! Why don't you have her skull japanned?"

"Oh, Bess! You mean trepanned."

"Oh, well, the words are synonymous, you know."—Philadelphia Call.

ACCORDING to M. Lagneau, the well-known statistician, there is a lower rate of mortality among bachelors under twenty-two years of age than among married men. Above that age the contrary is observed, and married men live longer than bachelors. Among bachelors thirty-eight per one thousand are criminals, among married men eighteen per one thousand.

EX-SENATOR SIMON CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, is the oldest United States Senator now living, not only as to the length of his Senatorial career, but as to the fullness of his years. He was a Senator when Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Cass, Benton and Silas Wright were there, and though he has passed his eighty-sixth birth-day, he is quite vigorous, with eyes undimmed and his natural forces unabated.

THE compulsory vaccination of persons crossing the southern border from Canada is said to be causing an immense amount of annoyance, mingled with some fun. The inspectors are inexorable, and all persons must display a certificate showing recent vaccination, or show their arms giving traces of the same. Among women, the tight sleeve of the period causes a tremendous amount of pulling and hauling.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the New York Times warning the public of a counterfeit silver dollar bearing the date 1884, which, he says, is being widely circulated. Chief Drummond, of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury, says that there is not a silver dollar of any date that has not been counterfeited, but comparatively few are now in circulation. The one referred to is much thicker than the genuine coin, so that it will not pass through the regulation scales, is thirty cents light on the scales and has a glassy appearance. It has a good ring, but otherwise is so clumsily executed that it should be detected at a glance.

The force of these robbers was estimated at 15,000.

FOUND WATERY GRAVES.

The Canadian Pacific Steamer Algoma Strikes a Rock in Lake Superior and Goes to the Bottom—The Loss of Life Estimated at Forty-Nine—Details of the Disaster.

PORT ARTHUR, Canada, Nov. 11.—The steamer Algoma, which has just been wrecked with a loss of many lives, cleared from Owen Sound on Thursday, the 5th, at four p. m., with freight and passengers for this place. Nothing of any account occurred during the voyage to Sault Ste. Marie, which point was made on Friday. The boat passed Whitefish Point about one o'clock in the afternoon of Friday. The wind was at that time blowing a stiff breeze from the east and northeast.

At Whitefish Point sail was made and the boat proceeded on her way under a full head of steam, the wind increasing in violence, accompanied by snow and sleet. At four o'clock Thursday morning the wind shifted to the northeast and a violent snow-storm raged. The sea was running very high and the boat was tossed about like a cork. At 4:15 o'clock an order was given to take in all sail and put the wheel hard a-starboard to bring the ship about and head out on the lake again on account of the snow and darkness.

While the ship was coming about she struck the point known as Greenstone Point, Isle Royal, about fifty miles from Port Arthur and one mile from Passage Island light-house, which has been abandoned since the first of the month. After striking the first time the boat forged ahead, driven by the wind. The vessel struck the reef a second time violently at the foreside of the boiler, and she immediately commenced to break up. Most of her passengers and a number of the crew were in bed at the time, but were rudely awakened by the shock. The scene that followed beggars description. Water poured in through the broken vessel and over the bulwarks, putting out the fires in the furnaces and extinguishing the electric lights. The screams of women and children were heard above the fury of the storm. The crew hurried hither and thither, doing what they could in the darkness to render assistance, but their efforts were of little avail, for in less than twenty minutes after the vessel struck the entire forward part of the boat was carried away, together with the cargo and human freight. Several persons clung to the rigging and a life-line which the Captain had stretched along the boat, but they were soon swept away by the sea and swallowed up by the angry waves.

The stern of the boat was steadily pushed upon the rock, and those who were not too much exhausted with fatigue and benumbed by the cold crept to the after-steerage and sought its shelter. Less than an hour after the striking all was over, and but fifteen out of over fifty lives were saved.

The survivors remained from the time of the disaster (four o'clock Saturday morning) until Monday morning at ten o'clock exposed to the weather, with but little food and clothing, nearly everything having been washed away. They were then sighted by some fishermen, who came to their rescue. After taking the survivors from the doomed vessel and placing them on Isle Royal, where a fire was kindled for their comfort, the fishermen went out and intercepted the Athabasca, which was coming in about ten miles away. Captain Foote of that vessel immediately put about and took the sufferers on board. They were brought here.

LATER.—The very latest dispatches say that the passengers and crew on board the ill-fated Algoma numbered sixty-three, of whom forty-nine were lost.

VIEWS OF CONGRESSMEN.

How They Stand on the Silver, Tariff and Speakership Question.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 16.—The Courier-Journal publishes letters from 150 members of Congress—fifty-nine Democrats and ninety-one Republicans—sent in response to these four questions:

Would you favor an amendment to the rules of the House providing that the General Appropriation bills, except the Legislative, Sundry Civil and Deficiency bills, shall be prepared and controlled hereafter by the appropriate standing committees on the several branches of public service?

Do you favor any change in the laws governing silver coinage and silver certificates, and if so, what modification would you regard as desirable?

To what extent in your opinion would a revision of the tariff and internal revenue laws be desirable at the next session?

Who is your choice for the caucus nomination for Speaker?

In the Democratic responses, forty-seven unqualifiedly favor an amendment of the rules; five give a qualified answer; four oppose a change, and three are non-committal. Four favor silver legislation, forty-nine oppose it, and six are non-committal. Fifty-three favor tariff agitation, three oppose it, and three are non-committal. Fifty-seven are for Carlisle, one for Randall, and one is non-committal.

Of the Republican members who responded forty-eight unqualifiedly approved an amendment of the rules, twelve qualified their answers, nine oppose it, and twenty-two are non-committal. Sixty favor silver legislation, sixteen oppose it and fifteen are non-committal. Seventy-five oppose tariff legislation, four favor it, and twelve are non-committal. For Speaker thirty are for Frank Hiscock, twenty-three for Reed, of Maine, eleven for Governor Long, of Massachusetts, and twenty-seven are non-committal.

The Washington correspondent of the Courier-Journal names these as the probable officers of the House: Speaker, John G. Carlisle; Clerk, John B. Clark, of Missouri; Sergeant-at-Arms, John B. Leedom, of Ohio; Door-keeper, Samuel Donelson, of Tennessee; Postmaster, Lycurgus Dalton, of Indiana.

The Corn Crop.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The November crop report of the Department of Agriculture says: The present crop of corn is the first full average in rate of yield since 1880, which was the last of a series of six full crops of 26 to 28 bushels per acre. The present crop, grown on an area of 53,000,000 to 54,000,000 acres is slightly above an average for a period of 10 years of 26¼ bushels per acre. The highest rate of yield is 36½ bushels in Nebraska and Ohio. The three corn-growing States which produce four-tenths of the entire crop—Illinois, Iowa and Missouri—each average several bushels per acre less than in the census year. Illinois averages 31; Iowa, 32; Missouri, 30. Utah averages 36; Massachusetts, Connecticut and Colorado, 35; New Hampshire and Rhode Island, 34; Michigan 33; Wisconsin, 32; Kansas, 31.

Punished the Wrong Man.

JOLIET, Ill., Nov. 11.—James Young, a convict, serving a ten-year term from Carroll County for burglary, has confessed that he is the murderer of Dr. Allen, of Sandwich, Ill. A young man named William Thomas was convicted of this murder on the evidence of a female detective from Chicago, and sent to prison for seventeen years. The Circuit Court of De Kalb County has issued a writ of habeas corpus for Young, and Sheriff Wood took him from the prison last evening to Sycamore to stand trial for the murder. In the meantime William Thomas has already served about six years on his seventeen-year term, but has always insisted that he was innocent.

Missouri River Improvements.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The Missouri River Commission's report asks for $1,000,000 annually to improve the lower part of the river by reducing its width sufficiently to insure stability of supply and approximate uniformity of slope, width and depth. It also asks $100,000 for the work on Rocky River above Fort Carroll for some experimental work, $15,000 for salaries and to continue the survey of the river, etc. The report recommends that $15,000 appropriated in the last River and Harbor bill for surveys above Fort Benton but not expended there be appropriated and made available for surveys below Fort Benton.

DAIRYMEN IN COUNCIL.

National Convention of the Butter and Cheese Association Held in Chicago—Discussion of Questions of Interest to this Important Industry.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—The twelfth annual convention of the National Butter and Cheese Association was held at Haverly's Minstrel Theater Tuesday. Delegations were present from twenty-one States. After the convention had been called to order addresses of welcome were delivered by Governor Oglesby, Mayor Harrison and E. Nelson Blake, President of the Board of Trade of the city. Responses were made by delegates from various points.

The permanent organization of the convention was then made, Mr. John J. Macdonald as President and Colonel R. M. Littler, Secretary. President Macdonald delivered his annual address. The interests represented in this convention were shown by the statistics of the trade. In 1850 there were manufactured 313,345,000 pounds of butter and 105,500,000 pounds of cheese, while in 1880 there were 806,672,000 pounds of butter and 243,156,000 pounds of cheese. The exports of butter had increased from $1,215,463 in 1850 to $18,862,407 in 1880. The total value of the dairy product of the United States was $500,000,000, exceeding the product of oats, wheat, cotton, steel or pig-iron. The amount invested in dairy cattle exceeds the enormous sum of $700,000,000. Among other questions touched upon, the speaker suggested the appointment of a committee to frame a resolution urging upon the next Congress the discontinuance of the silver coinage.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—At the session yesterday morning of the National Butter and Cheese Association delegates were present from twenty-four States. Hon. Norman J. Colman, the United States Commissioner of Agriculture, delivered an address on "The Dairy Interests of the Country." He said that as soon as he was appointed Commissioner he detailed a special agent to procure statistics of dairy products and also of the manufacture and sale of imitation articles. The manufacturers of artificial butter refused generally to make any report as to their processes or the quantity which they turned out on the people. Investigations, however, had shown that most of the material was treated with nitric acid, and employés had discovered the fact that their shoes and clothes were ruined in a short time in a butterine factory. The days of oleomargarine, however, were numbered, as lard and swine fat were cheaper than tallow and could be handled more readily. Mr. Colman gave statistics showing that there was manufactured by well-known establishments, which were ready to give their figures, over 5,000,000 pounds of imitation butter in the cities of New York and Boston alone! Nor was this all. Oleo oils and other adulterations were advertised and were sold to the farmer and the dairyman. These were mixed with cream before it was churned. To stop these nefarious practices would be easy if the parties engaging in them were tabooed in dairy associations, in agricultural societies and in social circles. Again, let no commission man be allowed to handle dairy products who directly or otherwise handles any bogus articles.

The recent formation of a National Protective Association would doubtless effect salutary reforms in connection with the whole dairy business. Legislators would feel the influence of this association, and would go to councils pledged to favor dairy interests. Prohibitory laws respecting oleomargarine and butterine, Mr. Coleman said, had been passed by about twenty States, but sections of them had been declared unconstitutional or inoperative in New York and Maryland, and convictions have been difficult to obtain. He thought that a bill should be carefully prepared, to be submitted to Congress at its approaching session, to protect not only the innocent purchaser and consumer of a counterfeit article of butter, but likewise to protect the important dairy interests of the country.

Mr. F. D. Curtis, of New York, and Mr. W. J. Chamberlain, of Ohio, both declared the bogus butter was as bad as counterfeit money, and that it was a crime to make either. Mr. Gould, of Illinois; Mr. Johnson, of Iowa, and others, also spoke against the manufacture of butterine.

Mr. George M. Stern, of the firm of Armour & Co., then described the process by which oleomargarine and butterine were manufactured, saying that no acids were used in the process. In their creamery butterine forty-five or fifty per cent. of extra creamery butter, purchased in the market, was used. The manufacturers asked a fair field in this business, as the farmers themselves had benefited by the introduction of oleomargarine and butterine. They had no intention of deceiving anybody. Thousands of people would rather eat the creamery butterine than poor butter, and there was nothing animal in its manufacture.

REDUCED POSTAGE.

It Has the Effect of Increasing the Expenditures of the Department.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The annual report of Sixth Auditor McConville was submitted to the Postmaster General yesterday. It shows the gross revenues of the Post-office Department for the last fiscal year to have been $42,560,843; gross expenditures, $49,317,188, making an excess of expenditures over receipts of $6,756,345. To this deficiency should be added the amounts earned by Pacific railroads for mail transportation—$1,340,226—and the estimated unadjusted liabilities—$285,000—making a net total deficiency, actual and estimated, of $8,381,571. The deficiency is $8,414,145 greater than last year. The explanation by the auditor of this increased deficiency is that it results from the reduction of letter postage to two cents, together with hard times generally. The expenditures show but the usual increase of $2,912,328, while the receipts from the causes named show a decrease of $765,115. The expenses of the star-route service show an increase of $330,000; of railroad service, $1,400,000; steamboat service, a decrease of $18,000. The largest item of expense was for railroad transportation—$15,655,315. For compensation of postmasters, $11,243,848 was spent; for clerk hire, $4,873,853; star-route service, $5,403,259; ocean steamship transportation, $325,402. The profits of the money-order system were $408,933. The amount paid foreign countries in the adjustment of their postal accounts was $66,955, and the amount paid by the United States on similar accounts to foreign countries was $74,859.

Will of the Late General McClellan.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—The will of General George B. McClellan was filed yesterday in the Surrogate's office. It is dated January 18, 1873. After providing for the payment of all his debts and funeral expenses, he bequeaths all his real and personal estate to his wife, Ellen Marcy McClellan. On the death of his wife he directs that all his estate be divided between his two children, George B., Jr., and Mary M., share and share alike. His military accoutrements he also leaves to his son, and the sword that was presented to him by the city of Philadelphia he leaves to his daughter.

Comment on the Chinese Crusade.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The Times, in commenting on the anti-Chinese crusade on the Pacific coast of the United States, says: "If Chinese immigration into the United States was thoroughly blocked for a period the Chinese might meet with favorable opportunity at home, and their immigration into the United States be altogether averted. The attempt to turn back the tide of foreign coolie labor by the means resorted to by the mobs in the western part of the United States is odious, and the injustice done the Chinamen in the recent attack on them is an act of spoliation committed against the world at large."

THE DAIRYMEN.

Third Days' Session of the Butter and Cheese Convention—Preparations for War on the Manufacturers of the Adulterated Article.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—When the Butter and Cheese Convention met yesterday morning Mr. Washington Windsor, of New York, presented the report of the committee on legislation. It stated that little had occurred during the year on which the committee could recommend the association to unite for National legislation. The enactments on a few of the States might be better executed by National rather than local laws. It recommended that Congress be asked to fix a standard for the purity of milk, and that all States should adopt that standard. In regard to the importation of eggs, the committee did not feel warranted in recommending any change in the custom laws, except on eggs imported from Europe. The report recommended National legislation prohibiting the sale of all adulterations of butter, except for what they are. It considered that the game interests claimed the attention of the association, and recommended that game be allowed to be sold in any market up to June 1, provided the same be killed in the open season. The report concluded by recommending uniform legislation by all the States, and that the State laws of New York be adopted by the various States.

Mr. Knight presented the report of the Committee on Resolutions. It recommended that as all adulterations of butter were dangerous to the health of the country, and as the capital invested in cows was greater than the capital of all the National Banks, it was the sense of the convention that every exertion should be made to induce the Legislatures of the several States to pass stringent laws to prevent the sale of adulterations of butter, and to appoint officers to see to the execution of such laws. The report further recommended that a committee be appointed for each State for the purpose of promoting uniform State legislation throughout the various States; that Congress should be asked to suppress the fraud of butter adulterations; that the question of transportation should receive careful attention; that the marketing of poultry and eggs should not be overlooked.

An amendment to the report calling on Congress to place a tax of ten cents a pound on all imitations of pure butter was adopted. The report of the committee, as amended, was then adopted.

At the afternoon session the convention resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Legislation. After discussion, the clause relative to New York legislation was stricken from the report, and the clause relative to the sale of game was changed from June to March. A discussion ensued regarding the clause in favor of Congress imposing an import duty on European eggs. Mr. Frank Lombard said that while he believed in free-trade, and that the farmers of the West were being taxed for the benefit of rich manufacturers, yet in this case, as the benefit would accrue to the farmers, he would vote for the report. The report was finally adopted. Mr. Washington Winsor, of New York, was chosen President and Colonel R. M. Littler, of Chicago, was re-elected Secretary.

GRATITUDE TO GROVER.

An Address Expressive of the Thanks of the Chinese Merchants in New York City for His Action in the War Against the Celestials in the West Sent to the President.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—The Chinese merchants of this city have sent to President Cleveland the following address:

To His Excellency the Honorable Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America.

At a meeting of the Chinese merchants of this city, held November 10, 1885, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"After many outrages have been committed upon our fellow countrymen in lawless districts by desperate, ignorant and wicked men, it gives us, the Chinese merchants of New York, great and unspeakable pleasure to learn that the President of the United States and the American people has issued a proclamation to protect our people, redress the wrongs done the injured, punish the malefactors and prevent by his great power a repetition of the actions which have caused so much suffering and death.

"We desire to express our gratitude and to thank the President for his righteous course, his courage and love of justice.

"We assure him that he has increased our admiration and veneration for his fearlessness and wisdom and our respect and obedience to all his laws. We also assure him respectfully that our countrymen in the United States endeavor to be good, peaceful, honest, law-abiding citizens, and that they are always anxious and eager to obey and enforce his laws, and so promote that prosperity and peace which are as dear to them as to the great officers and writers of his land.

"We instruct our scribes to interpret this into English and send the same, with all expressions of our esteem and veneration, to His Excellency the President.

"Given at our Municipal Chambers, the fifth day of the ninth moon of the eleventh year of the reign of the Emperor Kwong Huey."

A MISPLACED SWITCH.

A Baltimore & Ohio Passenger Train Hurled Over an Embankment—Twenty-one Persons Injured, Among Them a Congressman and Two Federal Officials.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 13.—A frightful wreck occurred at the Blue Stone Quarry, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at seven o'clock yesterday morning. Train No. 12, the through express from Baltimore to Pittsburgh, consisting of a sleeper, two coaches, two baggage and one express car ran into a misplaced switch and was completely wrecked. The sleeper rolled over the embankment into the Youghiogheny River. The other cars were upset and the whole train was detached from the engine. Twenty-one persons were injured, but none were killed outright. The names of the injured are:

Hon. C. E. Boyle, member of Congress from the Fayette District; Hon. John Dowling, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Twenty-third District; J. E. McMillan, [illegible] Agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Company; Hon. S. H. Bigler, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Twenty-second District; J. F. Joy, Boston, Mass.; John Sherman, Piedmont, W. Va.; [illegible] New York; Mrs. W. L. Wells, Indianapolis; Charles Kirsch, New York; [illegible] New York; Joseph E. Dallan, Brooklyn; Mrs. Lucy Moffatt, Sewickley, Pa.; S. H. Weimer, Garrett, Pa.; Mrs. Dyer, Pittsburgh; C. F. Iddings; F. McGraw; unknown man, and five others.

None of the wounded are believed to be dangerously injured, unless it is Congressman Boyle, whose condition is not known, but believed to be serious.

—The general statutes of Massachusetts provide that any woman can vote for school committee who is twenty-one years of age, has resided within the State one year and within the city or town in which she claims a right to vote six months next preceding any election, and who has paid by herself, her parent, guardian or trustee a State, county, city or town tax assessed upon her trustee in the State within two years next preceding such election.—Boston Post.

—In reply to a question what was meant by "polished" pecans, a New Orleans dealer said that the term proves the superiority of the nuts grown in Louisiana. They are not polished, and do not need it. But the Texas pecans have harder and rougher shells, so that they are much improved in appearance by being polished. An Austin (Tex.) firm invented the polishing machine, and ships them in large quantities all over the country.—N. O. Times.

BLOWS AT PROTECTION.

Platform Adopted by the National Convention of Free Traders at Chicago—New Officers Elected.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—The convention of the National Free Trade League, which has been in session in this city during the past two days, closed last night in a mass-meeting at Central Music Hall, where a very large audience was addressed by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and David A. Wells.

At the afternoon session the Committee on Nominations submitted a report, which was adopted. It named the following as the future officers of the league:

President, Daniel A. Wells, New York; a list of Vice Presidents to which nearly every State is represented; Honorary Secretary, R. R. Bowker; Western Secretary, H. J. Philpot; Central Secretary, Louis Howland; Treasurer, George F. Peabody. Executive Committee—Thomas G. Shearman, Josiah Quincy, A. W. Thomas, H. H. H. Stapler, E. P. Doyle, William D. Brownlee, A. A. Healy, W. W. Witmer, Erskine M. Phelps, M. D. Harter and W. B. Perkhoun. National Committee—R. R. Bowker, New York; G. Mosher, Iowa; I. W. Stiles, Illinois; P. S. O'Rourke, Indiana; William B. Brownlee, Michigan; J. Sterling Morton, Nebraska; F. L. Underwood, Missouri; W. H. [illegible], Louisiana; J. S. Dargan, South Carolina; James G. Jenkins, Wisconsin; James D. Hancock, Pennsylvania; Enoch Harpole, Kansas; J. M. Osborn, Ohio; P. J. Smalley, Minnesota; Josiah Quincy, Massachusetts.

The Committee on Resolutions submitted its report, which was adopted after several amendments had been made. The report was as follows:

We submit to the people of the United States that the continuance of the war tariff, with duties averaging forty-two per cent. on over fourteen hundred articles of domestic consumption, and a much higher specific duty on many crude materials, has prolonged the evils of war in times of profound peace, and has been the principal cause of the commercial and industrial depression of recent years.

By forcing labor and capital from naturally profitable into unprofitable lines of business, and by adding to the cost of production, it has decreased the common productive interests of the country, and thereby reduced both the wages of labor and the profit of capital. It has provoked an antagonism between labor and capital against which our great natural resources and our free institutions should have protected us; it has impaired our power to compete with other manufacturing nations in the markets of the world, and so obstructed National progress and development.

It has destroyed many branches of business, and has kept many people from engaging in other branches of business which would have given increased employment to labor.

By preventing our buying from nations willing to buy from us, and by provoking retaliation in like spirit, instead of promoting friendly reciprocity, it has obstructed the consumption of our agricultural and manufactured products by other countries, and has driven our commerce from the seas.

By impairing our domestic power to buy it has prevented the full development of our inter-State commerce and reduced the legitimate profits of and has driven into bankruptcy a large number of our transportation companies and made domestic traffic more costly.

Through the influence of its lobbies it has enthroned jobbing and corruption in our legislative halls and has impeded the reform of the civil-service.

In short, taking by force the earnings of one class of men to enrich another class, it is opposed to the spirit of American liberty and of the Constitution. It has prevented the National progress of wealth among the farming class, decreased wages and their purchasing power, and lengthened the enforced idleness of workingmen, restricted our manufactures from their natural markets, and demoralized the general business of the country.

While holding, accordingly, that taxes in aid of private interests, or for any purpose other than the requirements of Government, are un-American, unjust and unwise, and that every protective feature must at the earliest possible date be eradicated from our revenue system, we invite all who oppose the abuses of the present tariff to join us in promoting immediate steps of practical tariff reform, which we believe will increase wages, diminish the frequency of strikes, develop business and restore our flag to the seas.

We therefore urge upon Congress for action at the coming session—first, that under no pretense shall any countenance be given to attempts to increase protective duties; second, that articles which are at the foundation of great industries should, in the interest of labor and commerce, be free from duty, whether they be crude materials—as lumber, salt, coal, ore, wood, etc.—or partly manufactured—as chemicals, dyestuffs, pig iron, tinplate, wood pulp, etc.; third, that on products from such articles duties should at least be correspondingly reduced, so that the protection, real or nominal, to manufacturers shall not be increased, and that the consumers shall have the immediate benefit of the reduction.

We urge that any steps in tariff reform should simplify the present complicated classification, should do away with mixed duties, replacing them by ad valorem rates instead of by specific duties, which are most burdensome to low price goods consumed by the great body of the people.

We demand free ships, and the abolition of our restrictive navigation laws, which, together with the tariff, have driven our flag from the seas; and we oppose bounties and subsidies on shipping. We urge revenue reformers to vote only for such Congressional candidates as openly oppose tariff for protection, and to take steps to nominate independent candidates when all party candidates oppose tariff reform, preparing for that step by diffusing sound economic literature and promoting organization, especially in close Congressional districts.

The following resolution was also adopted: [illegible]

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that no further reduction be countenanced in the internal revenue tax on spirits and tobacco until the existing tariff has been brought to a strict revenue basis.

It was also agreed that reports of the convention proceedings be sent to the President and every Congressman and United States Senator.

DYNAMITE'S AWFUL WORK.

Thrown Into a Stove by a Child, It Wrecks a House, Kills the Infant and Fatally Hurts the Little One's Mother.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 13.—Particulars have just been received of a distressing accident which occurred near the little village of Rockfield, twenty-eight miles north of this city, yesterday morning. The little four-year-old daughter of Jacob Dhein, a lime burner and stone quarrier, innocently picked up a large dynamite cartridge used for heavy blasting and threw it into the kitchen stove. A terrible explosion followed, shattering the house, killing the little girl, fatally injuring Mrs. Dhein and seriously mutilating other members of the family. The child's head and arm were torn from the body, its head being found quite a distance from the house attached to a portion of the family dog's head, the animal having stood by the little one's side at the time of the explosion. The mother had both limbs broken, and her body frightfully mutilated in the region of her bowels. She can not recover. Mr. Dhein had several bones broken, but is thought not to be fatally injured. The force of the explosion was so great as to scatter portions of the building for miles around.

A Brother's Sacrifice.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 13.—Ex-Recorder Thomas C. Ford, now in prison for complicity in the murder of Police Captain Murphy, has confessed that he and not his brother, Pat Ford, now under sentence of death, committed the crime. Pat Ford confessed the murder at the time of the trial. The ex-Recorder says that that confession was made to save him, and he now confesses the murder because the Board of Pardons has refused to commute the death sentence of Pat Ford. He also says that Murphy, sentenced to death for complicity in the crime, was not armed, and had no hand in the murder.

Mr. Springer's Proposed Rules.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The subject of a revision of the rules of the House at the coming session is attracting general attention, and Congressman Springer, of Illinois, has spent a considerable part of the summer in devising a new system of rules. His view is to simplify them and concentrate power in the hands of one committee—that on Appropriations. He proposes to reduce the number of committees to fifteen and to provide that after a measure has come from the Committee of the Whole, or has been offered before the House for three days, it shall be in order to cut off filibustering by moving the previous question, thus enabling the majority to force a vote.

TOGETHER.

The summer [illegible] is brief,
While the [illegible] is in the leaf,
And the arch of the heaven is blue;
There's not a cloud to-day,
[illegible] near or far away,
Only sunshine, only sunshine, for us two.

The dimpling water calls,
The tide [illegible] crawls,
Shall we spread the sail, or dip the oar,
And steer [illegible]
Or what fairy coast you will,
Whatever misty, far, romantic shore?

The nymphs and nereids there
May twist their sea weed hair,
And the sirens sing their sweetest melodies,
While we float and float along
To the echo of each song,
Out on the mysterious, storied seas.

We may lean upon the oar
And listen to the lore
That the breakers whisper in our ear;
We may catch the sigh, alas!
Of drowning souls who pass
Far beyond us to some unreported sphere.

But perhaps the wind may rise
And [illegible] as it flies,
And the white squall follow in our wake;
And sweep us farther still,
With its resistless will,
From the [illegible] strands we hope to make.

Yet engulfed in bitter death,
With faltering, failing breath,
Touching [illegible] unknown in any chart,
What to us the waning light
Of [illegible] planet in its flight,
So we [illegible] live, nor die, apart?

"MOD" BANGS.

An Evil Intent Thwarted, and a Noble Deed Inspired.

Anywhere else she would have been called Maud, but Smoketon people were too busy making money to pay proper attention to diphthongs, so to them she was simply Mod.

Smoketon was not so large a place as one might imagine from the mere number of its factories. It crawled along in a blacky unwholesome manner, upon the banks of one of the loveliest rivers in the world, to a very unfair length, but was in parts scarcely more than half a mile wide, being shut in on the east by beautiful rolling green hills, over which it had made a grimy and ineffectual effort to climb. Among these hills flowed swift, clear mountain streams, doubling and winding many times on their way to the great river, to [illegible], when the snow melted in spring upon the hilltops, they often brought a larger tribute than was quite convenient.

It was indeed a beautiful country. Champ Preston said in his languid way, when he visited the place, that the part of Smoketon which the Lord made was a perfect success, adding that he had never visited a town where the people so bowed down to money and possessed so little of it themselves, for there were no millionaires in Smoketon.

Mod's surname was Bangs, the vowel of which was as unduly prolonged by the Smoketonians as her diphthong was unjustly shortened. There was nothing visibly heroic about Mod. She was the eldest daughter of a Smoketon operative, teaching in room No. 6, Ward eleven, of the Smoketon Public Schools. She was small and rather awkward in person and movements, with a protruding forehead, lifeless-looking sandy hair, and small, dull, unexpressive eyes. She was also an enthusiast in her profession, and had dim longings after "culture" and cravings for "sweetness and light." Above all she cherished a romance and worshiped a hero.

Stephen Dare was not at all a bad fellow, especially in his own opinion. He was a handsome young giant, with a frank, manly face, usually obscured by a cloud of soot; for Stephen, though only twenty-five, was a "boss" at Brown's mill, the largest nail-mill in Smoketon. He was well off, too, very well off for a place whose richest men only counted by tens of thousands; so it is not wonderful, perhaps, that he was much petted and spoiled by the Smoketon lasses, even though his "schooling" had scarcely passed beyond an elementary knowledge of "the three Rs."

Stephen and Mod had toddled about in each other's company when both of them were dressed; they had been deskmates during the boy's brief experience of school life, and had confided their joys and sorrows each to the other, though Mod was rather the better listener. The Eleventh ward school-house was on Stephen's direct way home from work, and as Mod always remained there until six o'clock to study, Stephen had got into the habit of calling for her, and thence one September afternoon they were walking home together when they first saw Myra Tracy.

Stephen's hands were in his pockets, his shoulders well squared under the shabby old coat, and his full breadth of chest displayed in its garniture of blue-checked shirt; he was whistling under his breath, and his chin, dark with soot and a three-days' stubble of beard, was carried proudly in the air. Mod's eyes were red from a fit of weeping into which she had been betrayed at the close of one of those days which come to every teacher, when the very spirit of evil seems to get into everything and everybody. She wore a faded pink gingham and carried a dilapidated lunch-basket in her gloveless hand. In this guise they turned a corner and came suddenly upon a lady in deep mourning who was gazing around her in perplexity. She was tall, slender and exquisitely graceful, with a wild-rose complexion and large, pathetic gray eyes, from which, as they approached, she sent a long glance straight into Stephen's heart.

"Excuse me," she said, in low, musical tones, "but I wonder if you can direct me to Mr. Tracy's?"

"Is S. Tracy, of Brown's Mill?" asked Mod, as Stephen, without even the presence of mind to remove his hat, could only ram his hands further into his pockets and stare in silence.

The faintest possible smile wreathed around Myra Tracy's beautiful mouth as she bowed in silence.

"O, then, S. Tracy lives on the next street to this. Your nearest way will be to cross the railroad and go up the hill through that alley by the carpenter's shop; it will bring you out right opposite his house."

"Thank you so much," and with another smile and bow Miss Tracy moved gracefully away, somewhat amused at the novelties which had come into her life in the shape of alleys by carpenters' shops and handsome young workmen stricken dumb by her charms.

"By jinks! ain't she a daisy!" exclaimed Stephen, recovering his breath and his Smoketon vernacular when the vision was gone.

"You never took off your hat, Steve," said Mod, glancing with a strange new pain in her heart at the man's flushed face and sparkling eyes.

"O, confound the hat! I forgot it. I say, Mod, she must be Tracy's niece. You know his brother died in Philadelphia last month, and I heard his daughter was to come here to teach her uncle's children. This must be the very girl."

"I guess I ought to call, if she is a teacher," said Mod, a little bitterly. Stephen replied promptly:

"Don't see why you shouldn't. She is awfully swell; but I bet you've got as much money, every time. Look here, Mod! don't tell anybody, but I wouldn't mind marrying that girl!"

"Whether she'd have you or not, I suppose?"

"Have me! She'd be lucky to get me—poor as a church-mouse, and a teacher! She'd jump at me."

"I know who'd be sorry for it, then. Those Eastern girls never know anything about housework. She'd just hold her hands."

"Not she! I'll take care of that," with a loud laugh. "As for work, she'd soon learn, and I should expect to keep a girl."

Mod came to a dead halt before a store they were passing. "Won't you drop in and order your cooking stove?" she asked sarcastically; "the rest of your arrangements seem to be complete."

"Don't you worry," replied Stephen, laughing good-humoredly; "that will be ready in time for the wedding," and they walked on together again.

But Stephen was even more in earnest than Mod supposed.

It was not a difficult matter to obtain an introduction to Miss Tracy, and when he asked permission to call the girl had not, as she said afterwards, sufficient [illegible] of mind to refuse. Myra, indeed, was [illegible] amused at herself, and still less so at Stephen. The handsome, illiterate young giant was a new type to the high-bred, "cultured" Philadelphian, and though she considered flirting a very unladylike proceeding her esthetic interest was sufficiently visible to afford Stephen all the encouragement he needed.

But for its elements of possible tragedy, the situation would have been rather a comical one to a looker-on who could have read the hearts of those interested. Stephen Dare was thoroughly accustomed to consider himself a great catch, and it never entered his calculations to be regarded as an inferior by any one who possessed less money than himself. He was simply and frankly unable to estimate worth by any other standard. Birth, education, refinement, he considered accidental qualities, like the shape of one's nose: the first always valueless, the second and third occasionally useful as a means of support, and not bad for women. It was no doubt the peculiar delicacy of Myra's beauty and the dainty polish of her manners that made her so attractive to him, and perhaps it was scarcely his fault that even on these points he was half incapable of appreciating her. Smoketon manners were by no means elaborately finished; were, in fact, but roughly blocked out. So it is small wonder that when Myra lifted her great, pathetic eyes to his and murmured "Thank you so much" in return for his gifts of fruit and candy, he should fancy that her manner meant far, far more than the loud-voiced gratitude of the belles of Smoketon.

On the other hand, while Myra readily understood that Stephen admired her, it would have been impossible for her to realize that he looked upon her in full security as his whenever he chose to claim her. The gulf between them was, to her eyes, so impassably abysmal. It was true she had never given him a grain—or at least not more than a grain—of what her own conscience or a man in her own circle would have called encouragement. She had refused his invitations to drives, theatres, etc., without hesitation or exception, but on the plea of her deep mourning, and with eyes of such tender sadness that Stephen quite believed it to be "only those confounded fashions" that stood in the way. And when he came to the house it was quite impossible to refuse to see him. He was a good-hearted, honest sort of fellow, Myra thought, though rather monotonous if one had him seven times a week, for he had absolutely no general information, and his range of thought was narrow in the extreme. That terrible Miss Bangs, who called one afternoon in an apple-green silk and velvet which would have been horrible even had she not been so conscious of it, and who was so evidently in love with "Steve," as she called him, was twice as intelligent. A very good wife for him, too, if he would only be brought to believe it. It was so much better for people to marry in their own class.

The truth was, Myra as well as Stephen, judged her fellows by a standard of her own establishing, and the one who most truly measured things by the eternal verities was poor, homely, neglected Mod.

Consequently when Stephen, at last, asked Myra to be his wife and was rejected with a haughty surprise which she could not quite conceal, it was Mod who was least astonished. Stephen believed he understood the whole matter perfectly, for it was, in fact, the presence of Champ Preston in Smoketon which had hurried him on to a declaration.

"A long, lazy, tow-headed fool," was his terse description of the all-conquering Champ, whose soft voice, handsome face, languid elegance of manner, not to speak of his attractions in the way of stocks, bonds and landed property, had for several seasons made him the lion of Eastern society. He had been abroad at the time of Mr. Tracy's death. Immediately upon his return he followed Myra to Smoketon, where, as he coolly informed her it was his intention to bivouac with the aborigines until she was ready to be married and return with him to civilization.

Myra readily allowed herself to be persuaded. Smoketon was more distasteful to her than ever since Stephen had taken his dismissal in such vehemently bad part. "He seemed actually to think I was in love with him, and declined to be convinced that I was not," she confided to Champ.

"They all do, my dear," he replied, languidly. "If a fellow is decently civil to one of the daughters of the land she thinks directly he is wildly enamored of her. Don't be afraid of this aspiring but dingy suitor; high tragedy in love has gone quite out of style, I assure you."

"I'm not afraid," she answered; "but you should have heard how he went on. It was thoroughly shocking and disgusting."

"Horribly bad form," assented Champ, meditatively caressing his long, yellow moustache.

Stephen fully believed himself to have been outrageously trifled with. "I don't blame her," he said to the long-suffering Mod, "for he's got ten times the money I have; but it's pretty rough on a fellow, all the same, to be sacked like this; and I'll get even with him yet!"

"That's the trouble," said Mod, perfectly unconscious that she was enunciating a profound truth. "That's the trouble, Stephen, about money. You are certain to meet some one who is worth more than you are. For my part I wish there was no such thing, people care so much about it."

Stephen carried matters with a very high hand. He laughed more, drank more, and talked louder and faster than ever in his life; but once, when he and Mod were passed by the stylish equipage in which Champ and Myra were driving, poor Mod felt her heart sink within her at the dark glance which Stephen sent after the pair, muttering under his breath: "Go it while you're young, old chap; but you ain't married yet."

Mod had ample opportunity to observe him closely, for he set up a rival team to Champ's and took her out behind it every day, usually managing to cross the track of the other couple once at least during the drive. He also purchased a revolver, and practiced daily until his incredible performance upon a silver half-dime made poor Mod's blood run cold.

Ought not Champ Preston to be warned? but how and of what? She could only wait and watch.

The wedding day arrived—a warm February morning—pouring with rain. Indeed, it had rained for two days over all the surrounding country. The river was unusually high, and the Smoketon Daily Trumpet had already warned its readers to expect a flood. But Smoketonians were thoroughly accustomed to floods. Some families on the low ground near the river were washed out regularly every spring, and accepted the misfortune calmly as a necessary part of the inevitable spring-cleaning, so the warning blast was less effective than perhaps the foresight of the Trumpet deserved.

"Happy is the bride the sun shines on," quoted Stephen grimly, as he stood at his chamber window carefully examining his revolver; "and blessed is the corpse that the rain falls upon," he added a moment later.

Mod's premises adjoined his, and she saw it all. The marriage ceremony was to take place at nine o'clock, and the happy pair were to go directly to the railway station. "Will he be at the church?" questioned Mod of herself, "or at the railway?" and could not answer. "What shall I do?" she cried miserably; "O, my God! What shall I do?"

He was not among the spectators whom even the pouring rain could not keep away from the church door, and, once satisfied of this, Mod turned her steps toward the station. There he was, sure enough, deep in conversation with a railway official. There was a strange glitter in his eyes, and his dark, handsome face was deadly pale. From head to heel he was buttoned carefully into a shining rubber coat, and Mod felt sure that in his bosom lay a harmless looking trifle toy, as bright as a jewel, that needed to be kept dry.

Incased also in rubber, and wearing a heavy green veil, it was easy for the girl to have passed him unrecognized and establish herself in the door of the ladies' waiting room, towards which his back was turned as he leaned a shoulder against the wall, and whence she could have reached out her hand and laid it on his shoulder.

"Goin' away?" asked the official, with that falling inflection which denotes a question in Smoketon.

"Not exactly," replied Stephen, with a grim laugh, "but I know a fellow that is; [illegible] to see him off."

"Oh!" said the official. "Well, he won't get pretty far to-day. Tracks flooded in every direction; river's on a regular high. Ain't a train come in this mornin'; and none ain't a comin'."

Distances were short in Smoketon, and Mod was back at the church with her information before the ceremony was over and got the news all at so successfully that it soon reached the bridal party. There was a hasty, whispered consultation; then the bride and groom stepped into a carriage and returned to Mr. Tracy's, while the best man sprang into another in order to inquire into the accuracy of the tidings.

Stephen saw the carriage drive up, and, drawing himself to his full height, plunged his hand into his breast. But only one person stepped from the vehicle, and that not the one for whom he waited. As he looked on with fiercely gleaming, bewildered eyes a hand was laid upon his arm, and Mod looked up into his face; Mod, in her draggled waterproof, with her green veil pushed up from a face transformed for the moment into beauty by the light of the soul within.

"Stephen," she said, holding his eyes with hers, "they will not leave to-day. The river is rising; all South Smoketon is under water, and the people are drowning. Come with me and save them. Come, Stephen," she added, solemnly, as he hesitated, gazing in surprise at her transfigured countenance, "prove yourself a man worth loving. Let that be your revenge."

"Blamed if I don't!" said Stephen Dare. He walked forward a step, drew his hand from his breast, and with a whirl of his wrist sent something bright, gleaming and sparkling into the fast approaching water. Then, taking Mod by the elbow, he hurried her away to her own home, where he put her within the door, saying briefly, "Now you're safe, Mod; stay there," and hastened on.

Stephen Dare was the best oarsman in Smoketon, but he found himself surpassed that day, not only in skill, but in cool, ready daring; for Champ Preston had been the crack oar of his college and had pulled stroke in many a boat-race, and now, with his bride's kisses warm on his lips, he felt strong with the strength of ten.

"I didn't think he had it in him, the blame galoot," said Stephen, with unwilling admiration. The languid, blue eyes were quietly, keenly alert; the tall, slender form proved to have muscles of iron under the smooth, white skin Stephen had so despised. And the strongest muscles, the readiest courage, had their work cut out for them that day.

Apart at times, at other times together, the rivals toiled, bringing many a boat-load of half-drowned wretches to safety and such comfort as was obtainable, while the rain still fell and the water rose steadily higher. As the darkness increased it grew more difficult to avoid the logs, beams and wrecks of all descriptions which the terrible river swept downward with resistless force. One of these crashed at last into Champ Preston's boat and crushed in its side as though it had been an egg-shell. In half a moment it had filled and sunk, and the rowers were struggling in the black, raging current. Stephen's boat was close at hand, and rushed at once to the rescue. One, two were picked up alive; the third, with a small, fatal bruise upon his temple; for the fourth they searched some moments without success.

"And married, too, this morning, poor fellow!" said one of the rescuers compassionately.

They were pulling away from the place, when Stephen caught a glimpse of a white face and yellow hair entangled in the branches of a tree that hung over the water. Should he speak? Why endanger the lives of all aboard by going back for, perhaps, a dead man? Besides, had not Fate paid off his score against his rival? Then why interfere?

But Stephen had for hours been spending himself for others, and therefore the struggle was short before he said quietly: "Hold up, fellows! Yonder he is."

Myra and Mod in the meantime had not been idle. There was much to be done for those taken out of the water, and, as the two worked together, they learned, if not to like, at least to respect, each other. Every room in Mr. Tracy's house had been thrown open to the sufferers; mattresses, beds, hastily-improvised couches of all descriptions, covered the floors, and there did not seem to be room for even one more, when suddenly Stephen stood before them, saying anxiously: "Now, girls, don't either of you fly off the handle. There's no charming young widow in this party, for he's alive and here!"

Myra Preston saw the white, unconscious face of a form which four men were bringing carefully in, and sprang towards it with a low cry.

"I saw him when the rest had given him up," said poor Stephen, gazing wistfully after her, as she followed those who bore away her husband to a long but sweet recovery. "I picked him out of the tree myself, and broke the news to her as careful as a lamb, and she never even said 'beans'!"

"But you save him, Steve? O, Steve, did you, really?"

Stephen turned and looked for a moment into Mod's face, then, opening his arms drew her to his breast, where, dripping wet as he was, she laid her cheek in rapturous content.

"I won't be left by every girl in town," said Stephen. "I'll marry you, Mod. You kept me from making a blame fool of myself this morning, and I'll make you a good husband."

Mod's only answer was a happy smile, and Stephen, bending his handsome head, repaid with a kiss the lips that had saved his soul.—Chicago Tribune.

VACCINATION.

The German Medical Profession in Favor of Several Pustules.

The question whether one or several pustules should be made in vaccinating is one that is hardly raised at all in this country. Even in the elaborate and careful article upon the "Technics of Vaccination," by Dr. Foster, in "Pepper's System of Medicine," no reference is made to the matter. Yet it is well known that the profession in Germany have very settled convictions that several pustules should be made. The German Commission which met years ago at Berlin to discuss and formulate conclusions upon the subject of vaccination took up, among other things, this point: "In what relation," it was asked, "does the number of vaccinia pustules stand to the protective influence of the vaccination?"

According to Dr. Koch, out of 703 small-pox patients in the Stockwell Hospital there died, of those having no scars, 47 per cent.; of those having poor scars, 25 per cent.; of those having one good scar, 5.3 per cent.; having two good scars, 4.1 per cent.; having three good scars, 2.3 per cent.; having four or more scars, 1.1 per cent. From this it would be inferred that a person having four scars on his arm is almost certain, even if he gets small-pox, to go through it safely. Koch himself takes the position positively that the protective power of vaccination is in direct relation to the number of vaccine pustules.

Prof. Grossheim cited cases to show that in revaccination the virus "takes" less often on those who have several scars. Similarly, Siegel found that among children presented for revaccination, the successes were the rule if the child had but one scar, and the exception if it had four to eight.

Arnsperger had observed during a small-pox epidemic that the protective influence of the vaccination increased with the number of the scars.—Medical Record.

A TRIP TO THE MOON.

Jacques Courbonudocq's Wonderful Achievement.

The Lovers—The One Condition—The Mysterious Riddle and Its Solution—The Journey—Saved! Saved!!!—The Return—Wedding Bells.

AFTER JULES VERNE.
[Robert H. Beale, in Texas Siftings.]

CHAPTER I.

Jacques Courbonudocq was a lawyer.

He was a criminal lawyer.

It is sometimes difficult to distinguish which is the criminal, and which is the lawyer, but let that pass.

Lawyers are men who collect claims on a five per cent. basis.

You get the five per cent.—the lawyer gets the rest.

Lawyers get more rest than any other class of professional men.

Jacques had red hair.

It was so fiery that the building inspector ordered him to wear a fire escape down his back.

The foregoing statement is poetic license—that is, it is a lie.

Jacques loved a beauteous maid named Jondrette.

Jondrette's papa was a retired sausage manufacturer from Chicago.

He had been knighted by the New York Genealogical Bureau on payment of forty dollars. The trinity of life to him was his pipe, cheese and beer.

HIS BEATING HEART.

Love for Jondrette caused Jacques' heart to beat wildly from morn to night.

It beat so loudly as to annoy the rest of the boarders.

But by all means let us avoid turning this original romance into a farce.

"I will ask for her hand," said Jacques.

CHAPTER II.

A glorious full moon throws her splendid radiance o'er the palace of Jondrette's papa in Fifth avenue.

The family bull-dog is pouring forth his soul in the back yard.

A young man kneels at the feet of Jondrette's papa. His hand is clasped in the lily-white flipper of Jondrette.

Jondrette is weeping.

In a short space of time she had shed four quarts of tears.

To be more explicit—a gallon.

Nothing would soften the hard heart of the old man.

In vain they threatened to commit suicide and other crimes.

"Will nothing move you, hard heart?" gasped Jacques.

"Yes, Monsieur, she is yours—"

A wild cry of joy broke from the lips of the happy pair, and rang and re-echoed through the awful silence of the dark dungeon—no we mean through the richly-furnished apartment. [The fact is we were getting this story mixed with next week's romance, and beg the reader's pardon for the mistake.]

"On one condition," continued the old man, with a scornful laugh.

"Name it," said both, in a breath.

"That you bring me a chunk of the green cheese from which the moon is made, to eat with my beer," said the old man, with a hideous leer.

Jondrette gave a low moan and fell fainting over a King Anne rocking chair.

"I will do it," said Jacques.

CHAPTER III.

For days Jacques tasted nothing.

He pored night and day over works on astronomy.

Memory and appetite alike failed.

He even forgot to charge a client five dollars, under the head of advice, for asking the time on the steps of the City Hall.

One day the title of an old book on an old book-stand caught his eye—"The Moon, by Bjornbog Skljajogbog, the great Norwegian astronomer."

He purchased the book, and fell to devouring it like a madman.

Suddenly a yellow paper fell to the ground.

It bore the following cipher:

"Noomeht ot yaw eht elddap dna ecaps ni miws ueo eH. ytivarg lla esol sthgin evif dna syad evif rof shgual ohw eno ynA."

Jacques spent weeks over the riddle.

One day when on the verge of madness he happened to look backwards at it. All was clear in a second.

The riddle read:

"Any one who laughs for five days and five nights, loses all gravity. He can swim in space and paddle his way to the moon."

ASTRONOMICAL RESEARCH.

"I shall succeed," said he.

CHAPTER IV.

At noon of the seventeenth Fevrier, two figures were ascending on the car of the high elevator at Coney Island.

They were Jacques and a friend.

The friend had had a little friendly misunderstanding with the bank of which he was cashier, and gladly consented to a tour for his health.

The two men had provisions, a huge cheese knife and forty pounds of humorous papers.

When they reached the top of the elevator they looked at straight up and commenced to laugh. They read and laughed, and laughed and read.

People said "they are mad."

For five days and five nights they laughed.

At the end of that time they had no weight. Their gravity was completely [illegible]

They could float in space.

With a glad shout they sprang out into the ether, and began to paddle like mad men for the moon.

On and on they sped, paying their respects to the Big and Little Bear, the Seal, the Walrus, and other animals in the celestial menagerie. They said to a huge star: "Who are you?"

THE JOURNEY.

"Uranus," was the reply.

"You're another," said they.

At which the stars in their courses groaned in chorus.

The journey is at last over and with a glad cry the voyageurs strike cheesa firma.

In a trice Jacques cuts a huge fragment from the surface of the moon, and wraps it in a silk handkerchief.

"Let us descend," said he.

They try. Horrors!!! They can not descend.

Who can describe their horrible situation, hunting for days on the moon's surface for rocks to put in their pockets, to give them weight.

At last their powers fail, and they fall fainting in the sand.

Suddenly a cry rings on the air: "Saved! Saved!! Saved!!!" exclaims Jacques, in a paroxysm of joy. "I have found it."

"What?" gasped his friend.

"A copy of an English comic paper in my vest pocket; we have nothing to do but read the jokes."

RETURNING IN TRIUMPH.

In a few minutes more the adventurers are falling through the air at a frightful rate of speed.

CHAPTER V.

The foreman is yelling for copy, and we shall have to condense this last chapter.

Jacques—glad cry—green cheese—beer—Bless you, my children—Do you take this woman?—I do—superb collation, elegant—$—$—$—newspaper reporters,—$—$—$—recherché, beautiful—accomplished, etc.—twenty-three corner brackets—twenty-six silver-plated butter dishes.

THE END.

The Farmer's Triumph.

"Did you get any diplomas at the fair," asked Deacon Dogwood of Farmer Furrow.

"N-n-no, not yet," he replied, with a faint effort to look cheerful. "I'm in a sort of a bad fix."

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Wall, I had some fine oats on exhibition, and the jockeys took 'em for horse feed; my old woman had a crazy quilt there, and the durned rascals used it for a horse blanket. Sal had some of her best fruit there, but the judges ate it all up. Of course, I kicked up a row, and they said they'd give me a diploma to hush the matter up."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A Liberal Physician.

Anxious Wife—I always have had faith in you, doctor, but you don't seem to grasp Mrs. Hobbs' case this time.

Physician—My dear woman, you can't effect a thing in a moment. All we can do is to administer the medicine and wait for it to do its work.

Anxious Wife—Dr. Saws came to see me this morning. He's a specialist, you know, and wants to take hold of the case. Moreover, he assured me he would carry it through to a successful termination.

Physician—Well, I don't like to see you imposed upon in this way, Mrs. Hobbs, and I wouldn't give up the case now for a good deal. I will not only guarantee to do as much as Dr. Saws offers to do, but I'll bury Mr. Hobbs into the bargain.—Tid-Bits.

"What are you doing down town at this time of night?" asked one pedestrian of another in front of the City Hall at ten o'clock the other night.

"Been working at my books down at the office."

"What ailed 'em?"

"My cash account wouldn't balance. Old Smith was looking over the books this afternoon, and he said he'd give me till to-morrow noon to see that cash balanced cash-on-hand account."

"Can you find the error?"

"Oh, I've found it and made everything balance. I brought $39.65 down from the house, you know!"—Detroit Free Press.

BARTER IN CONGO.

A Bonanza for Unscrupulous English Factors and Agents.

In regard to trade with natives of the Congo country, the principal articles brought in by the natives are ivory, rubber or caoutchouc, gum, peanuts and orchella weed, which latter, by a process of fermentation, can be made to produce a dyestuff that is used in imparting magenta color to cloth. The medium of exchange with the natives is a kind of cheap cotton print cloth, principally made in Manchester, Eng. The unit of this currency is the "long," which is about 1½ yards of print. Six "longs" constitute one "piece," the whole cost of which, laid down at the factory, is not over one shilling, English. The native brings in his ivory, or other commodity, which is weighed, and the price agreed upon. It is so many longs or pieces per pound or other measure. As article after article is bought and paid for, the cloth is delivered and piled up in front of the native making the trade, and, when he has been fully paid for his goods, it is now his turn to buy. He wants so much liquor, say ten pieces worth. He has the order filled and pays the ten pieces, which are received as so much currency by the factor. He wants brass wire to make anklets, ornaments and rude native jewelry, and purchases so many yards at so many longs a yard, powder, old flint-lock muskets, knives, looking glasses, glass beads, cotton print handkerchiefs, etc., until he has traded back to the factor all the cloth, the latter, of course, making two profits on the transaction, though the black man can not comprehend it. Africa seems to be the market for all the old firearms of the world, and the natives, who are poor marksmen, seem to prefer them more for the noise they make than the execution they will do. As they soon get out of order in unskillful hands, the demand is kept up and very nearly equals the supply. Cotton handkerchiefs, of bright colors, with pictures and portraits of European notables on them, are in great favor with the natives, the women wearing them on their heads, and men and women wearing them around the loins and thrown as a loose garment or cloth over the shoulders, and secured around the waist, as an article of ornament rather than of dress. Very little gum copal is obtained from the country bordering on the Congo River, though it is said to exist in the fields of the upper country in great quantities. It is found in the soil—that is, the best article of commerce is that which has remained in the sand or earth for an indefinite time—and it is said that the natives are deterred from digging it by the fetich men, who say it is wrong to sell the soil or land or anything pertaining to its composition.—Cor. Boston Herald.

The Danger of Insects' Stings.

A German medical paper tells about a girl who got diphtheria by being bitten by a hornet. A thick grayish-white scab at once formed, and fell off only the day before the first symptom of diphtheria appeared. The doctor had seen the sore, and also recognized it as a diphtheritic one, but believed it to be due to some injury, and to have assumed the diphtheritic character only when the constitutional affection set in. For it is well known that in a patient suffering from a graver form of diphtheria with decided blood-poisoning, any wound, whether made by a blister or accidentally caused, will at once develop into a diphtheritic sore and be covered with the false membrane so characteristic of this malady. Insects have so often been proven—if not the victims—the carriers of infectious virus, that the case just quoted ought not to surprise us, says the Medical and Surgical Reporter: "We believe that not sufficient attention has been paid to this manner of infection, and that many cases where an infectious disease seemed to have sprung up ex ipso would have found their explanation in just such a way as the one described. The lesson we learn from cases of this kind teaches us at once to employ locally cauterizing and strong antiseptic measures when a wound, due to the bite or sting of an insect, assumes the least suspicious or malignant character."

Paper and Pencils.

At a recent meeting of the Academie des Sciences M. de Boutarel read a very interesting essay on "Paper and the Industries Connected with It," in the course of which he quoted some remarkable statistics as to the rapid increase in the quantity of pens, paper, pencils, etc., which are manufactured in Europe and the United States alone. M. de Boutarel says that the manufacture of paper, which at the beginning of the century was practically nil in the United States, now amounts to 500,000 tons per annum, and that it is just double this figure in Europe, the value of straw, rags, and other materials used in the manufacture of paper being about £20,000,000. M. de Boutarel estimates the value of these 1,500,000 tons of paper when manufactured at £40,000,000; the note paper being calculated at 120,000 tons, worth £6,400,000. M. de Boutarel estimates the value of the steel pens manufactured annually at £800,000, while the number of heliotype plates may be safely estimated at 3,000,000—thirty Paris houses alone turning out 900,000. M. de Boutarel gives the number of lead pencils made every year, and though some of his figures can only be conjectural, they no doubt represent very fairly the enormous capital employed in these industries.—Chicago Mail.

Washing the Air.

Various devices have been employed for purifying the air from dust, germs and other impurities. Windhausen, a Frenchman, has recently designed an apparatus for this purpose which is well spoken of by technical writers. It consists of a double cylinder, the inner one being perforated to allow water to be thrown through it in a fine spray against the inside of the outer cylinder by rotary motion. Air is forced by means of a fan into the space between the two cylinders, the motion of the air and of the water-spray being in opposite directions. It is impossible for any air to pass through the apparatus without being washed and its impurities removed by centrifugal action. The proportion of water used may be varied as found necessary with reference to the condition of the air. The apparatus may be combined with any device for warming or cooling the air or it may be modified for treating smoke or gases.—Chicago News.

HOWLING GLAD.

How a San Franciscan Won the Eternal Friendship of an Acquaintance.

Love is a good deal like the car cable. It is endless, and goes on all the time, but it doesn't matter a cent what car it is drawing. You've always got to pay fare, too, but whatever you put into the box is gone. There was a man in Oakland who had a sweetheart. I suppose there are several men in Oakland who have sweethearts, several who have the same sweetheart, several who have several sweethearts. But this man had one sweetheart whom he adored, as only a man who finds it hard to get a sweetheart, and does not feel sure of her then, can adore. He wanted something precious to keep for her sake. So he got permission of the Central Pacific Railroad and came over to San Francisco one afternoon. A friend of his was going on to Dresden and a happy thought struck the fond lover.

"I want you to do something delicate for me," he said to his friend.

"What is it?"

He took out of his pocket a photograph and a lock of hair.

"Look at this. Isn't it lovely?"

Well, she was about forty-five, broad-faced, with a chunky nose and the faintest sensation of a cross-eye. The lock of hair was red. I am describing a woman who could not by any possibility exist in Oakland. I do not want to offend that city. I may want to live there some day.

"Y-e-e-s. She's good looking."

"When you go to Dresden I want you to have a painting of her made on porcelain, a daisy. I don't care what it costs."

"All right, old man. I'll do it."

"Take care of it, won't you?—the lock of hair, I mean."

"Certainly. Do you want to insure it?"

The friend went to Europe and came back. In Dresden he had made inquiries, and found what was required would cost fifty dollars. He made up his mind that anybody who wanted that girl painted and was willing to pay fifty dollars for it was an idiot. So he came back without the porcelain. He had been back some time, when he met the Oakland man on the street. Strangely enough the Oakland man avoided him, but he was cornered.

"Hullo! Got back? How did you enjoy yourself?"

Not a word about the commission. At last the 'Frisco man spoke up.

"By the way, I priced those porcelain paintings in Dresden, and I thought you would not care to pay fifty dollars for one, so I—"

The Oakland man gave a jump of joy. He seized on the 'Frisco man's hand and shook it nearly off.

"I'm so howling glad you didn't—so howling glad. I've got another girl now, and there would have been the deuce to pay. Come and have a cigar."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Gray's Inn.

For more than five hundred years a little fraternity of lawyers has nestled within the shadows of the sloping roofs of Gray's Inn. Here at his "box of a shop" under the gateway, Jacob Tonson, the famous publisher, issued Addison's "Campaign." Also within its courts Lord Bacon wrote his "Novum Organum," which King James declaimed as being "like the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." At the gateway also at one time dwelt Thomas Osborne, the bookseller, who gave $13,000 for the books from the Harleian library. The men of Gray's Inn in times now passed, were famous for masks and revels and for gorgeous interludes. Hawthorne loved the place, Dickens fitted it into his "Uncommercial Traveler." Pepys wrote about the fashions that were flaunted by the promenaders on Sunday after church, and Charles Lamb has embalmed its beauties in an epitaph by saying: "Those are the best gardens of any of the inns of court. Bacon has left the impress of his foot upon their gravel walks."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CHARLEVOIX, NOV. 25, 1885.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
E.D. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor

There is more than a bare possibility that Riel dead, will prove more troublesome to Canada than Reil living.

A southern newspaper informs the country that it is a matter for congratulation that "we have a democratic administration in form, under which the safety of the colored man is assured."

With an official republican majority of 43,000 in an off year staid old Pennsylvania can take her place at the head of the column as the banner carrier of the renewed onward march of republicanism

It is stated that two or three dozen of the prominent or leading business houses of Cincinnati are making preparations to remove to other points on account of Democratic lawlessness, fraud and general cussedness at elections.

Mr George William Curtis says that the recent election in New York "demonstrates what we have often stated, that the Democratic party is not a reform party." Mr. Curtis should have so known and so "stated" before Mugwumped in 1884.

Galveston is a city of about 35,000 inhabitants, and when the sun went down upon the day of the fire its business men had subscribed $31,000 to the relief fund of the sufferers. It shows the good material of the people of Galveston. Such people deserve prosperity and will receive it.

There is great excitement througout the northwest over Reil's execution, and it is believed that a civil war in Canada is possible. The defection of the French vote means a change of 43 members from the conservatives to the liberals, which will be enough to depose the present conservative ministry.

Los Angeles, Cal., is not a large city, but it has, says the Times, 200 saloons. The city has the choice to diminish the number of its saloons or enlarge its jail room to take care of the business manufactured by them. The Times thinks they "could worry along with 200 less and then be reasonably happy."

The democratic administration has apparently forgotten that one of the issues made by the party that placed it in power was that of the "enormous surplus in the treasury." Eight months have passed since it took control, yet the "surplus" is larger than it was when Mr. Arthur turned over the key of the white house to Grover Cleveland.

That good old Quaker poet, John G. Whittier, has a strength of political vision that has never failed him. He is certain that the republican party has a mission and a future in which it will fulfil it. Incidently he says that while Cleveland's intentions may be good the instincts of his party are against him and are proving too strong for him.

One hundred of the leading citizens of Evanston, Illinois, have organized themselves into a "Committee of Public Safety," to rid the town of thieves and scalawags. Four of the thieves who have recently been operating in that town are now in jail. Law and Order Leagues of that kind might do good service in many other places.

If Turkey can be induced to take sides with Bulgaria in her contest with Servia, Austria will be compelled to come to the aid of Servia, and Russia must ultimately back Bulgaria. England will do all she can to maintain the integrity of Turkey. As a whole, it looks as if the folks over the big pond were liable to have a war on a large scale.

Have the laboring men and the tax-paying men of the country who a year ago voted for "Cleveland and Reform" given much thought to the fact that the "enormous surplus" in the National Treasury which they wanted "reduced" is larger now than it was then, and that not a dollar of the interest-bearing debt has been paid, in the eight months of Cleveland's administration?

The New York Mugwumps are attributing the Republican defeat in that State to the "waving of the bloody shirt." The "bloody shirt" which was waved there by speakers from the West was the denunciation of election outrages such as the Democrats have heretofore committed there and in the South. But it begins to appear as if about the heaviest drag put upon the Republicans at the last election in New York was the support of the Mugwumps.

At the session of the national rabbinical convention of the reformed Hebrew church on the 18th, the subject of Sabbath observance was discussed at some length, and a resolution was unanimously adopted, declaring that there is nothing in the spirit of Judaism or its laws to prevent the introduction of Sunday services in localities where the necessity for such services appears or is felt. In the preamble to the resolution the importance of maintaining the historical sabbath as a bond with the past, and as a symbol of the unity of Judaism the world over is recognized. After recommending the formation of societies for the propagation of reformed Jewish doctrines among the poorer classes, the convention adjourned to meet at Cincinnati the first Monday in May, 1886.

The "Cajuns."

Commissioner Harris, of Louisiana, showed several pieces of homespun cotton goods which he says were made by the "Cajuns." "Who are they?" I asked. The word, he replied, is a corruption of Arcadians, and is applied to the descendants of those people whose settlement in Louisiana was immortalized in Longfellow's "Evangeline." Then, turning to the map, he showed me where the "Cajuns" live, and gave an account of their homes and their simplicity of life. In [illegible] words he [illegible] the words of Basil, the blacksmith, as to the beauty of the country and fertility of the soil and the ease in which they lived. They are almost like the "lilies of the field" in their freedom from toil. In a little patch around their houses they cultivate what cotton they need for their wearing apparel and such vegetables as they use.

When the spring rains cease they go out upon the prairie and examine the depressions, from one to five acres in extent, which are then ponds of water, and if found to be not more than eighteen inches deep they prepare to sow their rice. First they soak their seed thoroughly then scatter it broadcast over the pond from the backs of horses. The weight of the soaked rice causes it to sink, and they have no further care for their crop until the harvest time comes. Should a drought prevail in spring they then scatter the seed upon the dry ground. To prevent the birds of the air from devouring it, the "Cajun" looks out over the prairie where his herds are, and riding to the nearest he drives the cattle back and forth over the seed until it has been trodden into the soil.

Then putting up the light fence around his rice plantation he goes home satisfied. In July his crop is ready for harvesting. For this he uses a sickle, tossing the sheaves as they fall into his cart. This is a cumbrous affair of wood, even to the wheels and axles. No iron is used in its construction. The oxen are not yoked, but the tongue is made fast to loops fastened to their horns. The sheaves are spread out upon the prairie and the grain is trampled out by the oxen, as it used to be when the edict went forth: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." The grain is swept together, sacked, carted home, and emptied into a bin. When any is needed for a meal the housewife takes a sufficiency, puts it into a wooden handmill of simple construction, rubs off the hulls in a few minutes, winnows it in a sieve, and soon has it cooking.

The commissioner showed on a map a place where, for six miles, the chief crop of the "Cajuns" is gathered from the orange trees. In selling this crop a singular custom prevails. When the trees are blooming, a buyer, the "diego" (why so called no one seems to know) appears among them. After a week of conference, during which he and they have had repeated whittling-matches, a bargain is struck for the season's crop, one half is paid down in cash and security given for the balance, and then the "Cajuns" enjoy their dolce far niente with from $1,500 to $2,000 in hand for every head of the family, and as much more secured for the future. Basil, the blacksmith, did not err when he told Evangeline of the wealth of these teeming lowlands.—New Haven Palladium.

It has been lately discovered that the body of John Foxe, author of the famous "Book of Martyrs," was interred on the south side of the chancel of St. Giles' Church, Cripplegate, London, of which church and parish he was for some time vicar. A slab which had been overlaid has been found on the western wall of said church, bearing the following inscription: "John Foxe, the most faithful martyrologist of the Church of England, the most sagacious investigator of historical antiquity, the most valiant defender of the evangelical truth, a wondrous worker of miracles, who presented the Marian martyrs, like phœnixes, alive from their ashes."

How to Induce Sleep.

Until recently I have not been able to secure much sleep on the first night of a railway journey, and it may be an advantage to many travelers to know how the inability was overcome. An excess of blood in the brain prevents sleep. How to remove the surplus is the problem for the unfortunates who wish to sleep but cannot. A pump is needed for the purpose, and it may easily be provided as follows: Having assumed the usual position of repose, inhale and exhale slowly and steadily long breaths, devoting the whole attention to making the inhalation and exhalation of exactly the same length. The length should be much greater than that of ordinary breathing, although not sufficient to disturb the circulation by working the lungs to their utmost capacity. Any person who has force of will enough to concentrate his whole attention on the maintenance of this style of breathing can compel sleep in very unfavorable circumstances, and victims of insomnia should know it.

The value of the method is not solely in its holding the mind to one object of thought, but the process of breathing here described is really equivalent to the insertion of a pump to draw off its excess of blood. To convince yourself that this is so, fill your lungs with all the air that they will hold, and then expel it, repeating the operation three or four times as rapidly as possible, the result will be a feeling of faintness, unless you are other than an ordinary mortal, and its cause will be a deficiency of blood in the brain, produced by the pumping process. Such violent breathing will not induce sleep, however, as there is a reaction which sends the life current rushing back to the seat of the mind. Scientists say that the reason why fear, surprise or any other sudden emotion often causes faintness is because it rapidly drives the blood from the brain, and the fact is significant for those who wish to understand how to induce sleep, whether on the railway train or in their beds at home, by pumping the excess of blood from their brains by a peculiar method of breathing.—New York Mail and Express.

Mr. Matthew Arnold made a mistake in giving London as the authority for pronunciation. There are many words pronounced differently by different people in London. The House of Commons has been always recognized and accepted as authority, though not infallible, and most of its leading men were educated at Oxford, where Walker is regarded as the best authority for pronunciation. But even in the House of Commons there have been differences of pronunciation among the leading men. Even Lord John Russell and O'Connell always pronounced "either" "ither," and "oblidged" "obleeged."

The Power of a Physician.

"The art of the physician can do much to remove its subjects from deadly and dangerous influences, and something to control or arrest the effects of these influences. But look at the records of the life-insurance offices, and see how uniform is the action of nature's destroying agencies. Look at the annual reports of the death in any of our great cities, and see how their regularity approaches the uniformity of the tides, and their variations keep pace with those of the seasons. The inundations of the Nile are not more certainly to be predicted than the vast wave of infantile disease which flows in upon all our great cities with the growing heats of July—than the fevers and dysenteries which visit our rural districts in the months of the falling leaf.

"The physician watches these changes as the astronomer watches the rise of the great river. He longs to rescue individuals, to protect communities from the inroads of these destroying agencies. He uses all the means which experience has approved, tries every rational method which ingenuity can suggest. Some fortunate recovery leads him to believe he has hit upon a preventive or a cure for a malady which has resisted all known remedies. His rescued patient sounds his praises, and a wide circle of his patient's friends joins in a chorus of eulogies. Self-love applauds him for his sagacity. Self-interest congratulates him on his having found the road to fortune; the sense of having proved a benefactor of his race smooths the pillow on which he lays his head to dream of the brilliant future opening before him. If a single coincidence may lead a person of sanguine disposition to believe that he has mastered a disease which has baffled all who were before his time, and on which his contemporaries looked in hopeless impotence, what must be the effect of a series of such coincidences even on a mind of calmer temper! Such series of coincidences will happen, and they may well deceive the very elect. Think of Dr. Rush—you know what a famous man he was, the very head and front of American medical science in his day—and remember how he spoke about yellow fever, which he thought he had mastered.

"Thus the physician is entangled in the meshes of a wide conspiracy, in which he and his patient and their friends, and Nature herself are involved. What wonder that the history of medicine should be to so great an extent a record of self-delusion!

"If this seems a dangerous concession to the enemies of the science and art of healing, I will remind you that it is all implied in the first aphorism of Hippocrates, the Father of Medicine. Do not draw a wrong inference from the frank statement of the difficulties which beset the medical practitioner. Think rather, if truth is so hard of attainment, how precious are the results which the consent of the wisest and most experienced among the healers of men agrees in accepting. Think what folly it is to cast them aside in favor of palpable impositions stolen from the records of forgotten charlatanism, or of fantastic speculations spun from the squinting brains of theorists as wild as the Egyptian astronomer.

"Begin your medical studies, then, by reading the fortieth and the following four chapters of Rasselas. Your first lesson will teach you modesty and caution in the pursuit of the most deceptive of all practical branches of knowledge. Faith will come later, when you learn how much medical science and art have actually achieved for the relief of mankind, and how great are the promises it holds out of still larger triumphs over the enemies of human health and happiness."—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in July Atlantic.

An Answer Wanted.

Can any one bring us a case of Kidney or Liver Complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure? We say they can not, as thousands of cases already permanently cured and who are daily recommending Electric Bitters, will prove. Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Weak Back, or any urinary complaint quickly cured. They purify the blood, regulate the bowels, and act directly on the diseased parts. Every bottle guaranteed. For sale at 50c. a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

You will notice how quickly a thoroughly successful article is imitated, and also that the imitations are without merit, as they are gotten up by unscrupulous parties. Beware of imitations of Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic. The genuine is sold by Druggists, and promptly cures dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malaria diseases, poor appetite, low spirits, headache, or diseases of the kidneys, stomach and liver. Price fifty cents.

Good Results in Every Case.

D. A. Bradford, wholesale paper dealer of Chattanooga, Tenn., writes that he was seriously afflicted with a severe cold that settled on his lungs: had tried many remedies without benefit. Being induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, did so and was entirely cured by use of a few bottles. Since which time he has used it in his family for all Coughs and Colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands whose lives have been saved by this Wonderful Discovery. Trial Bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Those who believe that nature will work off a cough or cold should understand that this is done at the expense of the constitution. Each time this weakens the system, and we all know that the termination of this dangerous practice is a consumptive's grave. Don't take the chances, when a fifty cent bottle of Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure will safely and promptly cure any recent cough, cold or throat or lung trouble. Buy the dollar bottle of Druggists for chronic cases or family use.

The best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

Catching a Man-o'-War Bird.

An old sailor, whose appearance indicated that he had been much buffeted by wind and wave, stood yesterday resting his back against a mooring-post near a bulkhead in South street, and, despite the raw atmosphere, meditatively smoking. The glowing bowl of his pipe rested on the top of a barrel some distance away, and the stem was fully four feet long. It was very thin, and seemed to be bone. Its hue was a bright, glossy black, though what its original color had been the sailor had to say. It curved with a long, graceful, uniform sweep from the mariner's lips to the bowl.

"It's the wing bone of a man-o'-war bird," said the owner when asked about it. "Land folks, I believe, call them albatrosses; we sailors like the old name of man-o'-war bird better. I caught the one that I got this stem from about five hundred miles south of the Cape of Good Hope. I hooked him with a piece of raw fat pork tied to the end of a rope lanyard. It was blowing half a gale of wind, and the man-o'-war birds were out enjoying it as usual.

"They just touch the top of a wave with their feet, and then give a sharp quick cry and go driving on a hundred yards or so before they take another plunge. I got a big lump of fat pork at the galley, and let it tow overboard with the lanyard, about fifty yards astern of the ship. One of the birds saw it, and had swallowed it in a minute, and we began to haul him. My stars! but he gave us a job. It took five of us to get him on deck, and then, of all the unwieldy birds you ever saw he was the worst. A goose would have been graceful to him, and he did not seem a bit like the beautiful white birds of his kind that were sweeping about the ship, now ahead and now astern, sailing against the wind or with it just about the same rate of speed, and seeming to be part of the gale.

"My prisoner squatted down on the deck and began to cry. There was no doubt about it. He sobbed and whimpered like a hurt child, and the tears ran down his long hooked beak and dropped off the knob at the end. After a time he became seasick. But his illness did not cease there. He got more and more sick every minute as the vessel rolled and pitched in the heavy sea that was running. It was genuine seasickness. This seems curious with a bird that lives altogether on the water, but a man-o'-war bird always gets seasick when he is taken on the deck of a rolling ship. I would have saved him if I could, but if I had thrown him overboard he would have been swamped by the big seas before he could have used his long wings. Neither could he rise from the deck, and in about two hours he laid his head down on the planks and died.

"I divided the long wing bones among the crew, and they all made pipe-stems of them. They are hollow, flesh-colored, and very light, and that is the reason the man-o'-war bird can fly so long. It is forever on the wing, and only goes ashore on some uninhabited island at breeding-time. Sailors think they sleep flying, that is, some of them think so but I believe they sleep floating on the water, when it is calm enough—which is not often about the Cape of Good Hope, or else never sleep at all. They are the biggest birds that live anywhere. The one I caught weighed twenty-nine pounds, and measured seventeen feet from wing tip to wing tip, and he was not at all a large one. No, we had no ill luck after the bird's death. If you shoot one and kill him you may look out for squalls, but to catch him with a piece of fat pork and let him die on deck is a different thing altogether, you know."—New York Sun.

Dietetic Errors as a Cause of Disease.

I have come to the conclusion that a proportion amounting at least to more than one-half of the disease which imbitters the middle and latter part of life among the middle and upper classes of the population is due to avoidable errors in diet. Further, while such disease renders so much of life, for many, disappointing, unhappy, and profitless, a term of painful endurance, for not a few it shortens life considerably. It would not be a difficult task and its results if displayed here would be striking—to adduce in support of these views a numerical statement showing causes which prematurely terminate life among the classes referred to in this country, based upon the Registrar-General's reports, or by consulting the records of life-assurance experience. I shall not avail myself of these materials in this place, although it would be right to do so in the columns of a medical journal. My object here is to call the attention of the public to certain facts about that which are insufficiently known, and therefore inadequately appreciated. And I shall assume that ample warrant for the observations made here is within my reach, and can be made available if required.—Sir Henry Thompson, in Popular Science Monthly for July.

A Kissing Hero.

When Gen. Sherman was in Edwardsville, Ill., the other day, several little circumstances occurred which were not down on the bills and would not be mentioned were it not for the fact that the young ladies recently visited by the osculatory hero have been heralded far and near as making such favorable impressions upon the general as to render irresistible the impulse to kiss them. The young ladies of Edwardsville are just as attractive as those of any other city, and the general, with his experience, was quick to note this fact. After the G. A. R. exercises, the other night, the stage of the opera-house was invaded by a bevy of young ladies, who were to rehearse a cantata. The gray-bearded veteran struggled manfully to maintain his hard-earned reputation of kissing each pretty girl he meets, but found himself very busy kissing every lady introduced, as there were no exceptions to the general's rule, including only pretty girls. His well-known penchant had preceded him, and one young lady "just vowed she wouldn't let him kiss her," but before she knew it the wily veteran grasped both her hands and planted squarely on her mouth a kiss, unlike the Henry V. kiss in that it was not lingering in its character, but sounded like a plank had cracked. The affair was evidently relished by all but the young gentlemen who witnessed, but were not allowed to participate, and regretted that they had not come into the world early enough to have won fame and become veterans in the late unpleasantness.—Louisville Commercial.

The language of flowers: Poor Charlie sighed and said, "My favorite flower, my dear, is the forget-me-not." "And mine," she said, "is mari-gold," and then poor Charlie knew the game was up, and got.—Judge.

Why Professor Langley Didn't Go To Harvard.

Professor Langley was born at Roxbury (now Boston) August 22, 1834. Like many another Boston boy, he was sent to the Boston Latin school, where Latin and Greek and little else was taught.

Latin and Greek was reputed to be the sum and end of learning, and Harvard college seemed to show dim perspectives of more Latin and Greek. It was no wonder that young Langley, whose genius lay in quite another direction, should look about him, after his graduation from the school, to see if there were not some practical way in which he could pursue those mechanical and astronomical studies that already had fascinated him. He had little inclination to enter college, and the openings in astronomy proper were very rare in those years, even rarer than now. Since he was ten years old, he had been reading and studying astronomy, making small telescopes, using those and others, with various success, but always with ardor. The practical question of how to shape his life was one that he had solved, and a variety of causes led to his determination not to go to college, but to become a civil engineer. Here at least was a profession whose basis was mathematical, and in which mechanical tastes and acquirements would have scope. So the practice of engineering was begun; special circumstances forced him into architecture, and for some years this was his pursuit. These were dull years, mostly spent in the West, where at that time there were few opportunities to display any real ability in this special calling.—Professor E. S. Holden, in Popular Science Monthly for July.

Large quantities of barbed wire for fencing purposes are now being shipped from this country to Brazil and Central America. A short time ago a vessel sailed for Honduras with barbed wire as one-third of her entire cargo.

Mr. Charles A. Dana relates the following reminiscence of Andrew Johnson, whom he met in a hotel in Richmond, immediately after the Union troops had entered the city. On shaking hands, Mr. Johnson began to express his views concerning the necessity of severe punishment for the chiefs of the confederacy. To which Mr. Dana replied: "Why urge these opinions upon me? Mr. Lincoln will be here this morning or to-morrow, and he has the decision of the question." "I know that," rejoined Mr. Johnson, "but the subject is of such moment, and it is so necessary that an example be made, that I wish to argue the question with every gentleman I meet."

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

An Imaginative Discourse On the Heavenly Constellations.

The Divine Nature as Illustrated by "The Pleiades and Orion"—Each World a Room in the "Many Mansions" Provided for the Redeemed.

The subject of the following sermon, recently delivered in the Brooklyn Tabernacle by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, was "The Pleiades of Orion," the text being.

Seek Him that maketh the seven stars and Orion.—[Amos, v., 8.

A country farmer wrote this text—Amos, of Tekoa. He plowed the earth and thrashed the grain by a new threshing-machine just invented, as formerly the cattle trod out the grain. He gathered the fruit of the sycamore tree and scarified it with an iron comb just before it was getting ripe, as it was necessary in that way to take from it the bitterness. He was son of a poor shepherd and stuttered, but before the stammering rustic the Philistines and Syrians and Phoenicians and Moabites and Ammonites and Edomites and Israelites trembled. Moses was a law-giver, Daniel was a prince, Isaiah a courtier and David a King; but Amos, the author of my text, was a peasant, and as might be supposed, nearly all his parallelisms are pastoral, his prophecy full of the odor of new-mown hay, and the rattle of locusts and the rumble of carts with sheaves, and the roar of wild beasts devouring the flock while the shepherd came out in their defense. He watched the herds by day and night, inhabited a booth made out of bushes, so that through these branches he could see the stars all night long, and was more familiar ...

... and then trust God, and if things are all mixed and disquieting and your brain is hot and your heart sick, get some one to go out with you into the starlight and point out to you the Pleiades, or, better than that, get into some observatory and through the telescope see further than Amos with the naked eye could, namely, 200 stars in the Pleiades, and that in what is called the sword of Orion there is a nebula computed to be two trillion two hundred thousand billions of times larger than the sun. Oh, be at peace with the God who made all that and controls all that; the wheel of the constellations turning in the wheel of galaxies for thousands of years without the breaking of a cog or the slipping of a band or the snapping of an axle. For your placidity and comfort through the Lord Jesus Christ I charge you, "Seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion."

Again Amos saw, as we must see, that the God who made these two groups of the text was the God of light. Amos saw that God was not satisfied with making one star or two or three stars, but he makes seven, and having finished that group of worlds makes another group, group after group. To the Pleiades he adds Orion. It seems that God likes light so well that he keeps making it. Only one being in the universe knows the statistics of solar, lunar, stellar, meteoric creations, and that is the Creator himself. And they have all been lovingly christened, each one a name as distinct as the names of your children. "He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names." The seven Pleiads had names given to them, and they are Alcyone, Merope, Celæno, Electra, Sterope, Taygete and Maia. But of the millions and trillions of daughters of starry light that God calls by name as they sweep by him with beaming brow and lustrous robe. So fond is God of light, natural light, moral light, ...

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

Governor Alger has issued the following proclamation:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LANSING, Nov. 5, 1885.

According to a custom ... by our forefathers ... one day in each year has been set apart especially for Thanksgiving.

Therefore I, Russell A. Alger, Governor of the State of Michigan, do designate Thursday, the 26th inst., for such observance. On that day let us all show our gratitude by acts of charity, abstaining from business, gathering in places of public worship and around our firesides with family and friends, and thanking God for preserving us from pestilence and danger, for prosperity and peace, and ask Him that these mercies may be continued to us as a people.

In other words, New York is a tie as between the two great parties. The contest last year proved that this is at least a very close State. It belongs to neither party. Hill's plurality for Lieutenant-Governor was 196,781. The decrease from that figure to 10,000 proves either that he was not running on his merits three years ago or that he was running on his demerits in 1885. The Mugwump vote was cast, we believe, for the Republican State ticket. This brought back an element that had left the party. The much-talked-of Democratic Mugwumps failed to scratch their ticket, bad as they proclaimed it to be, but seriously bad as it was, they, with a few honorable exceptions, swallowed it whole. A casual glance at the returns, however, shows that the Republicans are at fault for their defeat. Too many of them in the interior failed to vote. The result of the election is a triumph for Tammany Hall.—Albany Evening Journal.

"The greatest question settled by the Democratic victory is the position of the Mugwumps. They are completely routed, horse, foot and dragoons. The 'holier than thou' politicians went in to show that they had the balance of power. The result shows that they have no power. Neither the President ...

How a Bunco Man in New York Played it on a Wealthy St. Louisan.

[St. Louis Chronicle.]

Alois Helmbacher, a wealthy and influential citizen of this city and the senior partner in the foundry firm of Helmbacher & Bros., arrived from New York yesterday, where he was buncoed out of several thousand dollars. He did not realize the truth until he was half-way home. Last Saturday he was met in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel by a young man who cordially grasped him by the hand and represented himself as the son of R. J. Lackland, a bank President here. He said he was on his wedding trip, and Mr. Helmbacher felt flattered at the recognition. The groom took him around and introduced him to Mrs. Lackland, and a pleasant time was experienced. The young man then suddenly discovered that a request he had sent home to his father for money had been delayed—would Mr. Helmbacher oblige him with a loan? The victim drew a check for $1,200, but was induced to raise it several times, and then the young man got the check discounted and kept his old friend in charge until he was ready to take the train. He was seen on board and left in the best of spirits. While pondering over the good qualities of his youthful friend on the way ...

Apropos of the sudden death of General George B. McClellan, we note that the New York Sun points out the singular fact that Governor DeWitt Clinton, Governor Silas Wright, Governor William L. As a matter of fact the heart is the least susceptible to primary disease of any of our vital organs. It is, however, very much injured by certain long-continued congestions of the vital organs, like the kidneys, liver and stomach. Moreover, blood filled with uric acid produces a rheumatic tendency, and is very injurious to healthful heart action. It often proves fatal, and, of course, the uric acid comes from impaired kidney action.

Roberts, the great English authority, says that heart disease is chiefly secondary ...

Dr. Clark, medical superintendent of the Toronto insane asylum, who is considered the best insanity expert in Canada, examined Riel at the time of his trial. He stated yesterday that Riel was a full maniac, and had been legally committed to an asylum in Washington, in the United States, and at Longue Point, Montreal. His visions, dreams and prophesies were the result of a diseased mind. He was not a crank like Guiteau, but was intermittently insane from boyhood. He should have been confined for life.

Louis Reil was hanged at Regina at 8:23 o'clock on the 18th, and died almost without a struggle. His executioner was one Jack Henderson, who was a prisoner of Riel in 1870. The body was temporarily buried at the foot of the scaffold, but will be removed in a few days to St. Boniface cemetery at Winnipeg, there to rest by the side of his father. The execution caused great excitement in the Province of Quebec. At Quebec and Montreal men were seen on the streets wearing crape on their hats and on their coat-sleeves, and incendiary hand-bills calling for meetings were distributed. Flags bearing signs of mourning were hung at half-mast, and special pictures and decorations in windows attracted large crowds. Students paraded the streets execrating Orangemen, but no breaches of the peace are reported. In Ontario the feeling appeared to obtain that Reil got his deserts.

Before the next session of Congress terminates the country will witness a most beautiful struggle between the President and his supporters on the one side and the New York Hill Democracy on the other. The latter are promulgating a policy of rule or ruin—and will probably accomplish both.

A Synopsis of Rev. C. F. VanAuken's Sermon to the Young People on the Evening of the 22d Inst.

"Show Thyself a Man."—1 Kings 2: 2.

These words were spoken by King David to his son Solomon, as the last advice prior to his final departure. David felt assured that if Solomon would strictly carry out this injunction, that prosperity and success would follow. The speaker endeavored to impress upon his hearers the necessity of laying a good foundation upon which to build. The best and only foundation is the religious character of a young man.

It is necessary to lay these fundamental principles in youth. The bent of the tree must be made in the twig. The young man should study himself to find out his natural inclinations as to what kind of business he inclines; then prepare himself for that particular one. Said, some are too fickle-minded; to day they would be a farmer, to morrow a merchant, and next week they would be something else.

Show thyself a man of stability—of one business. Some persons seem to be afraid of work. Here the speaker referred to a military officer of low degree, who was commanding a squad of soldiers engaged in raising timber for embankments, but the men were not quite able to do it. Gen. Washington came along in citizen's dress and was accosted by the subordinate, and ordered to give these men a lift. The General inquired why he did not assist. "O, I am a Corporal." Washington dismounted and helped the men, and said to the Corporal, "When you get into trouble again, call on your Commander-in Chief."

Some young men are too tony for their comfort. Muscular labor is as honorable as any other kind of employment. Some, because they are educated, must engage in some kind of business aside from manual labor. This is a mistake. It is not the business that makes the man honorable, but vice versa. A good man will never engage in anything that is bad, if he knows it.

"Show thyself a man," and follow your chosen calling, whether it requires mental or manual labor. The minister thinks his son must be of that calling also; the lawyer and the physician are inclined to the same idea, and the farmer thinks all his sons must all have farms. This is an error. The preacher said there was too little tenacity in the characters of many young men. * * * You must have a calling in view which you intend to follow through life, and let your education and aim in life lead you in that direction. Train yourselves, and study the principles of right, justice and truth. Aim to be a man. No young man should allow himself to be discouraged in the pursuit of lawful success in life. Look, if you please, at the humble stations in life from whence came our most eminent men. * * *

In conclusion, let me impress upon your minds the necessity of laying the foundation for a religious character; and observe the injunction of the Master: "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness," and be assured your labor will not have been in vain.

The Sheriff Gets a Square Meal.

CHAS. LAMEREAUX, Esq.

Please accept my thanks for the venison roast left at my residence. May you live long and happily, and kill many more deer; and may you ever remember the Sheriff, is the earnest prayer of

HARRISON BERDAN.

Charlevoix, Nov. ?, 1885.

Marine.

The tug Higgie has laid up, and the others will soon follow suit.

The steamer North Star is tied up at East Jordan for running without licensed officials.

The schooners Sea Gem, Florence M. Smith and Mocking Bird are due here. They will lay up on arrival.

The propeller Van Raalte was in port Thursday from St. Ignace after a quantity of fish for S. H. Darts & Co.

The scow Lottie Mason will bring a full load of spring wheat from Milwaukee for the Riffenburg & Co. flouring mill.

Navigation at all the large lake ports, so far as heavy shipments of grain and coal are concerned, is practically closed.

The propeller Friant leaves for Grand Haven Saturday to lay up. She will return as soon as she can get her nose through the ice in the spring.

The schooners Melvina, Waukesha, Walhalla, and two other vessels are on their way here—probably the last chances for this port this season.

Capt. "Dunc" Buchanan was here last week as a first-class passenger on the schooner Dawn. He has laid up the Evening Star, and will come out next season in the schooner Stampede.

The propeller Champlain arrived from Chicago and proceeded to the Straits on Monday afternoon, after discharging a large consignment of freight. She is expected back to-day, and will proceed to Chicago to lay up.

The schooner Mocking Bird arrived in Milwaukee Sunday afternoon at two o'clock in good shape, after a rough passage. Capt. Madison has been very successful in this vessel, having made as good time and as many trips as many of the "fly" vessels.

The Lawrence, the last Northern Michigan line steamer for the north for this season, left Chicago Monday evening, and is expected here to-night or to-morrow. These popular and reliable propellers have been a great convenience to the business interests of Northern Michigan, since their advent in these waters, and everybody will be glad to see them back early in the season of '86.

Nov. 21—Schr. John Rabet, 120 c wood, 2,000 lbs, Upright & Emrey, to Chicago.
21—Schr. Dawn, 70,000 ft hardwood lumber, D. Buchanan, to Sheboygan.
21—Schr. Lapetite, 120 c wood, P. Thorp, to Mil.
21—Schr. Lottie Mason, 50 c wood, D. S. Way, to Milwaukee.
21—Schr. Narragansett, 411 tons [illegible], F. L. [illegible], to Milwaukee.
21—Schr. Mil[illegible], 22,000 ft hardwood lumber, D. E. Wilber, to Detroit.

Ironton.

Prof. Howe turned up last week after his vacation, and our schools are in full blast again.

A "mush and milk" social held at Mr. Thos. Bird's Wednesday night last, netted the M. E. ladies $12, and was a social time.

The Narragansett which has been trading here all summer, went out with her last load Saturday evening. The captain and crew have made many friends among us here and all united in throwing the "old shoe" after them.

If they can buy enough logs to make it an object, the Pine Lake Lumber Co. will fit up a yard here and put a scaler here this winter. Come on with your logs, this is what we want.

The Iron Co., are offering good prices for wood in the yard.

The young ladies of the "Willing Workers" entertained their gentlemen friends last Friday evening, by inviting them to partake of an elaborate tea provided in the parlors of one of the friends of the society.

One of our young men sold himself out at two for a cent, last Saturday. 'Twern't the same one, eh W?

The Ironton clown throws himself around and gives his opponents in the Lyceum club lots of points. Wanted two hours to talk on the negative of the question. Resolved, that the works of nature are more pleasing to the eye than the works of art.

The teams engaged drawing wood have been obliged to lay off on account of bad roads.

Prof. Howe promises us a rich school exhibition before holidays. Says something about an organ for the school, which pleases the scholars mightily.

It is satisfactory to note that the local papers of the state are not receiving the very funny remarks of the eveningnoose about the "rural press" with the humility and submission which the editors of Mr. Scripps' arrogant paper probably expected. There is nothing more ridiculous in publishing a weekly paper in a town of 1,000 inhabitants than in one of 200,000, and the jests of our esteemed contemporaries were ill-timed and in bad taste. We venture to say that there are one hundred weekly papers in Michigan each of which wields a greater influence than the flippant daily sheet that tries to insult them and their class.—Tribune.

The official statement of the losses of the union army during the war has been made public by Adjutant General Drum, and it contains more entertaining matter of general interest than is usually found in a statistical exhibit from a government department. Among the curious facts brought out is the showing that the colored troops suffered more severely than any others. The average loss was about 15½ men to each 100 of all that took the field, while the rate among the colored troops alone was 19¼, or nearly one-half of the whole number of that class of volunteers. The largest percentage of loss in action occured among the white soldiers, the large death rate of the colored troops being mainly caused by sickness and exposure. Next to the colored regiments it is also a curious fact that those composed of Indians sustained the heaviest losses—18 out of every 100.

Former 15 cent counter changed to the 10 cent counter, at "The Fair," besides change in prices on many other goods.

Local News.

—M. T. Woodruff's new paper at Cadillac will be launched next week.

—Steele & Nowlen of Advance, have dissolved. Both parties, we understand, will continue in business at that place.

—No snow Thanksgiving.

—Ed. Aldrich is home from Dixon, Ill.

—Wm. H. Carr and wife are in St. Johns for the holidays.

—Mrs. E. Hodge, the Boyne City milliner, has removed to East Jordan.

—Look over the advertisement of J. L. Hurd & Co.; it contains another change.

—Charlevoix county farmers have received $12,000 for the potatoes they have sold to shippers, this fall.

—A. J. McLeod announces that he will pay the highest market price for hides and pelts at his Charlevoix market.

—Married, Nov. 26, at the M. E. parsonage, by Rev. J. T. Iddings, Mr. James Willis and Miss Eliza J. Ager, both of Marion Township.

—Yesterday was the first day of winter.

—The first ice formed on South Arm last week.

—The Harbor Springs Republican had an editorial last week.

—The shortest day in the year is two weeks from next Sunday.

—The only saloons in Grand Traverse county are located in Traverse City.

—The Boyne City Statesman is much improved by new type in its advertising columns.

—Wm. E. Holly, son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Taylor, of this place, died in Detroit on the 26th.

—The steamer Clara Belle moved the clothing stock of C. G. Lewis from Boyne City to East Jordan, Monday.

—Alton Cook, the young boat builder of Boyne City, left for Florida last week where he will continue the business.

—The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad company have sold about 9,000 acres of land along their road since January 1 at $9 per acre.

—The Boyne City Statesman will soon enlarge from a five to six column folio, and the East Jordan Enterprise from a six to a seven column folio.

—The Homeopathists are very much disappointed by the failure to get a physician of that school of practice for superintendent of the Northern Michigan Insane Asylum.

—The Enterprise says J. Halmond of Leland, secured about 2,300 bushels of wet corn from the wrecked barge Graves at the Manitou and sold it at Sutton's Bay and Northport.

—Frankfort has talked railroad for many years, and now it is going to have one. It will be known as the Frankfort & Southeastern R. R. Co., which proposes eventually to reach Cadillac.

—The mammoth holiday advertisement on our first page is a correct guide to a mammoth stock of holiday goods. Dr. Crouter's shelves and tables are full of choice articles for presents. Go in and see for your self.

—James M. Darrah, of Big Rapids, will put in 3,000,000 feet of lumber on the west branch of the Muskegon for the Ducy Lumber Company, and 6,300,000 at the headwaters of Town line creek for A. H. Petrie, of Muskegon. Mr. Darrah is a brother of "our own John," of Clarion.

—Supervisor Harris, of Norwood, in this issue, knocks the insides out of the Journal's mares nest, recently discovered. The fact is there was not a particle of ground for the charge. The proofs submitted by Mr. Harris bear out our statement that the charge was "conceived in ignorance and brought forth in malice and spite."

—A meeting was held at the Probate office in East Jordan, one day last week, Drs. Carlstein, Nicholson and Bennett officiating, to examine into the mental condition of Charles F. W. Burchardt, of Advance, and he was pronounced insane. The Judge, however, allowed him to return home upon his promising to remain there. Burchardt is a German of about 45 years of age, is well educated, and is one of the early settlers of this county. He labors under the delusion that he is an illegitimate son of the German Kaiser.

—As a token of the generally conceded popularity of Mr. Robert Miller, who was about to retire from the management of the Bridge Street House, the boarders, ex-boarders and friends of Mr. Miller united in giving him a complimentary benefit on Saturday evening. The occasion was not of the nature of a formal gathering, but about everybody dropped in between the hours of six and nine and devoured as near fifty cents worth of oysters as they could with comfort to themselves. Many were the compliments paid to Mr. Miller's qualities as a landlord, and no less numerous were the expressions of regret that his familiar face would no longer greet the guests of the Bridge Street House.

—Notice the advertisement of John Litzau's harness shop in another column.

—Wm. Voice & Son, of Northport, have a contract for sawing 3,000,000 feet of lumber.

—Judge Rice and wife, of Cadillac, were the guests of Geo. W. Miller over the Sabbath.

—C. T. Cook and wife leave for an extended visit in Howell, Ann Arbor and Reading, next Tuesday.

—The wife of Rev. Leroy Warren, State Congregational Missionary, died at their home in Lansing on the 22d.

—The Boyne City Star Clothing and Dry Goods House have a holiday ad in this issue. They have a fine line.

—The report that the telegraph line between East Jordan and Elk Rapids via Bellaire, was to be taken up is confirmed.

—Phil. Badour, of the Statesman, recently killed a deer and then hung him up in the woods and let somebody steal him.

—Every day's progress in the work on the Riffenburg & Co. flouring mill is developing the fact that it will be one of the finest mills in the State.

—A new hospital has been opened at Reed City. Dr. E. S. Richardson is the resident physician and Dr. F. C. McCallum of Hersey, will be consulting surgeon.

—By the way, now is a good time for you to subscribe or get your neighbor to subscribe for the Charlevoix SENTINEL and the Detroit Tribune. You get them both for $2.00

—The first patient admitted to the northern asylum for the insane was received last Wednesday. Paul Elgbert is his name, he was a resident of Traverse City, and was one of laborers on the building.

—Emil Anneke, of Bay City, who was receiver of public moneys at Traverse City in 1867, succeeding a defaulter named Gregory, is reported to have been $1,400 short, and suit will be instituted against his bondsmen.

—It was the "Committee to settle with the County Treasurer" that examined the vouchers of the county orders at the last meeting of the Board of Supervisors, instead of the Committee on Claims as we stated last week.

—There are $30,000,000 lying in the Bank of England vaults, awaiting claimants. The money belongs to the Barker estate and "Ren" Barker, of the Reed City Clarion, will get $25,000 of the amount when the division is made. By good rights, Ren should have the whole pot.

—There has been considerable comment on the fact that the State tax this year is much heavier than in previous years. There are several reasons for this, among which are the large appropriations for the different state institutions, among which are the Soldiers home to be erected at Grand Rapids, and the Northern Insane Asylum, at Traverse City. It is also said that the entire appropriation made by the legislature for current expenses for two years is levied in this year's tax, and that next year the state tax proper will be little or nothing.

—The Northern Asylum for the Insane, located at Traverse City, will be open for the general reception of patients on Dec. 10th. On and after that date patients may be sent from any of the counties in the northern district. This district embraces the following named counties: Alger, Alcona, Antrim, Arenac, Baraga, Benzie, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Chippewa, Clare, Crawford, Delta, Emmet, Gladwin, Grand Traverse, Gratiot, Houghton, Iosco, Isabella, Kalkaska, Keweenaw, Lake, Leelanaw, Mackinac, Manistee, Manitou, Marquette, Mason, Mecosta, Menominee, Midland, Missaukee, Montcalm, Montmorency, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Ogemaw, Ontonagon, Osceola, Oscoda, Otsego, Presque Isle, Roscommon, Schoolcraft and Wexford.

—G. W. Patten and family, of Frankfort, will remove to Charlevoix in the spring.

—The Ironton furnace shut down for the season yesterday. The Co. will buy wood this winter, however.

—A successful experiment of lighting the Northern Asylum at Traverse City with electric light has been made.

—The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad have decided to lay 3,000 tons of steel rails next season, thus replacing all their iron track.

—The Base Ball Club cleared $21 from their party, Thanksgiving eve. The affair was well managed, and an enjoyable success all around.

—The Bellaire Breeze says that Mackinaw trout are being taken from Grass Lake, and large schools of blue herring have visited Intermediate Lake.

—Every Republican should subscribe for either the Detroit Weekly or Daily Tribune. The daily comes at $5 a year, while the weekly is $1, or only 50 cents if taken with a paid-up SENTINEL subscription.

—A correspondent of the Petoskey Democrat says that W. C. Niles is talking of moving back to Clarion. He has gone in company with A. A. Watkins and S. Thatcher to lumber 160,000 feet of pine near Clarion.

—It will pay the readers of the SENTINEL to examine the advertisements contained therein every week. Our business men are enterprising, and they make announcements from time to time, which it is to the advantage of all to know. Read the advertisements.

—The SENTINEL does not go off "half-cocked," nor publish railroad news until there is the very best of authority for it. There was a report around that the G. R. & I. R. R. Co. contemplated building a road from Traverse City here, and to Boyne via Ironton. The air has been full of that kind of rumors for the past three years. We have no doubt that Charlevoix will have a railroad in the near future, but we have no authority for treating the latest report as an absolute fact. When the SENTINEL has any railroad developments, its readers may rest assured they are reliable and from the best authority.

—The East Jordan Enterprise says: "A certain business man of this place has assumed several times during the past summer to lead us and several more of our citizens by the nose. In consequence of our politely declining to be so led, he wreaks his vengeance upon us by taking or sending his job work to a neighboring town. In conversation with several of the citizens of said neighboring town, they characterized him as a human hog. Them's our sentiments, brothers. We doubt if there is another business man in East Jordan, who professes to be a man, that would be guilty of such mean and malicious conduct. He does not deserve, nor should he receive the patronage of our subscribers."

—We will not argue with a fool. The paper across the way, just recovering from its chagrin over a recent ridiculous fiasco, misquotes and garbles an item which appeared in a recent issue of the SENTINEL, with an ignorance of the principles of argument that is more ridiculous, if possible than its last foolishness. The SENTINEL does not believe that the Board of Supervisors audited any exhorbitant bills under pressure of county seat influences, and never intimated that it did. The item, only a part of which the Journal quotes, when printed as a whole, does not imply an expressed opinion of the SENTINEL as to the truth of what was "asserted," and no one with a thimble-full of brains could so construe it. But the Journal's opinion of what the SENTINEL means does not cause the tremor of an eyelash, or touch a single nerve center in the editorial department of the SENTINEL. Our indifference is only equalled by the phenominal foolishness of the Journal. Now hunt up another mare's nest.

NASBY ON NEW YORK.

How the Ghost of "Boss" Tweed Is Evoking Enthusiasm in Democratic Breasts.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

IN A BASTREEL, [illegible] November 10 1885.

My horizon hez bin obscured by the dark and murky clouds uv despare, but there is now a rift in em, and thro that rift I see a silver linin. I hev heerd from Noo York, and my sole wich hez bin constipated with woe, is now swellin like a apple bud in the merry spring time.

I see in this the hand uv Providence. The Republikins beet theirselves in Noo York. When they charged and proved it upon our noble standard-bearer, Dave Hill, that he hed bin a pardner with glorious Bill Tweed, when thay showed conclusively that he wuz jist sich a man ez glorious Bill Tweed, only with more intelleck into him, that settled it. That's the exact kind uv a Dimecrat the Dimocrasy want. They want a successor to Tweed, which is Hill, and they electid him. Wat do they want uv a man wich ain't a goin to do them no good? Wat good is it to the Dimocrisy uv the Sixth Ward in Noo York to hev a man at the hed uv affares wich won't give em the offises, wich won't hev no stealins about, wich won't assist to plunder the city and State and make respectable divys out uv wat is erthered? It is sich men ez Hill that the Dimocrisy want, not sich ez Cleveland. The gost uv Boss Tweed kin evoke more enthoosiasm in a Dimekratic mind than a battalion uv Clevelands in the flesh.

When the Republikins proved beyond the shadder uv a doubt that Dave Hill wuz an old Tweed man, that his noshuns uv pollytix wuz the same ez those uv that lamented man, it provoked an enthoosiasm fur him that wuz terrible, and he wuz electid ez he shood hev bin. The Dimocrisy uv Noo York wich hez bin in a constant state uv disgust at the shillyshallyin uv the tyrant Cleveland, made haste to make known ther noshuns uv how things shood go by electin Hill. And we shel nominate Hill fur the Presidency, and elect him, too.

The Dimocrisy uv Injeany beet therselves the same way. It wuz considered a grate stroke uv pollsy by our managers to charge corrupshen [illegible] power by the Administration to save itself, and therefore did not make the efforts necessary to success. Curiously enough, many other Republicans, after Ohio, and after the vociferous return of certain newspapers, became over-confident, and hence a further loss. Others thought an off-year was a good time to indulge in a Prohibition vote.

It is not to be forgotten that a defeat of the Administration this year in New York would have been a wonderful and almost unprecedented phenomenon. Not once, since present political divisions have existed or for nearly half a century, has an Administration been beaten in the President's own State in the first year after his election. A defeat so humiliating no President of either party since Van Buren has had to face. The Republican voters were not able to realize that in a few short months the new Administration had so weakened itself that a full vote would have insured such a phenomenal defeat. With no Congressmen to be elected, with no direct issue to force National questions upon their attention, they have suffered the Administration to retain the one Northern State upon which it has concentrated its power. And yet it is now plain that even the President's own State might have been carried by the Republicans this year, had they realized their opportunity.—N. Y. Tribune.

HENDRICKS AND LEE.

Each Falls Into the Other's Arms Over the Result in Virginia.

Bourbon met Bourbon when Fitzhugh Lee and Hendricks exchanged congratulations over the State-supremacy victory in Virginia. Fitz Lee in his telegram to Hendricks piously prayed that "the spirit of the Sage of Monticello might watch over the destinies of Virginia forever," and no doubt this sentiment was highly acceptable to the Indiana mossback. Lee and Hendricks are united in their bigoted attachment to the so-called principles of Jeffersonian Democracy as laid down in the State-sovereignty and secession resolutions of 1798 which Jefferson declared the greatest work of his life. The flower of Jeffersonian Democracy is the State-sovereignty doctrine, and it is the supposed revival of this theory in Virginia which prompts Hendricks and Lee to indulge in felicitations.

A BUSY MAN.

A Weary Traveler's Experience with a Man Who Is Too Busy for Business.

A traveler landed at a wayside tavern in Texas early one morning, and after sitting around without discovering any signs of breakfast until an appetite that a mustard plaster began gnawing at his vitals, he walked up to the landlord, who was behind the counter bent nearly double over a newspaper, in which he was tracing the lines of a thrilling romance with his forefinger as he puffed away at an old cob pipe.

"What time do you have breakfast?" said the stranger.

The landlord groaned, but did not look up. The traveler raised his voice a notch or two and repeated:

"When do you have breakfast?"

The man behind the bar never moved. The traveler thumped on the counter with his knuckles to attract attention, and again said, much louder than before:

"When do you have breakfast?"

"Heh?" said the landlord, with his face still buried in the newspaper.

"When do you have breakfast?"

"'Most every day."

"Is this one of the lucky days?"

"Heh?"

"Are you going to have breakfast to-day?"

"I reckon more'n like we will."

"How soon do you suppose it will be ready?"

"I don't 'spose nothin' about it."

"What's the reason you don't?"

"'Coz I don't know."

"When do you generally have it?"

"When the coffee biles."

"Has the fire been started yet?"

"I don't know nothin' about it."

"What's the reason you don't?"

"'Coz I don't care a cuss."

"See here, old man, ain't you the landlord?"

"I reckon mebbe I am."

"Well, then, I'd like to have you tell me who's running this tavern?"

The old man raised his head at last, gave the stranger a look that made his flesh creep, and said: [illegible]

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The Brooklyn Divine Discourses On Brawn and Muscle.

The Results of the Preaching of the Doctrine of Free Lovelsm on American Society—The Responsibility of Physical Strength to the World.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, in a recent sermon in Brooklyn Tabernacle, took "Brawn and Muscle" for his theme, taking for his text:

And Samson went down to Timnath.—Judges xiv, 1.

There are two sides to the character of Samson. The one phase of his life, if followed into particulars, would administer to the grotesque and the mirthful but there is a phase of his character fraught with lessons of solemn and eternal import. To those graver lessons we devote this discourse. This giant, no doubt, in early life gave evidence of what he was to be. It is almost always so. There were two Napoleons—the boy Napoleon and the man Napoleon—but both alike; two Howards—the boy Howard and the man Howard—but both alike; two Samsons—the boy Samson and the man Samson—but both alike. This giant was, no doubt, the hero of the playground, and nothing could stand before his exhibitions of youthful prowess. At eighteen years of age he was betrothed to the daughter of a Philistine. Going down toward Timnath a lion came out upon him. Although this young giant was weaponless, he seized the monster by the long mane and shook him as a hungry hound shakes a March hare, and made its bones crack and left it by the wayside bleeding under the smiting of his fist and the grinding of his heel. Passing along, after a while, the same place, he turned into the thicket to see the remains of the monster he had slain. Under the hot climate, all the perishable particles of the lion had disappeared, and under the rain and the sun the skeleton had been washed and bleached until it was as pure and as white as a vase of porcelain. Into this skeleton the bees had gathered their honey, the sweetness of grass tops, the juice of the pomegranate, the aroma of the wild flowers which had stood in the gloom of the thickets, pale nuns in nature's convent. On the wedding day Samson had propounded a riddle—a riddle so foolish that [illegible]

[illegible] more than one dizzy with perpetual vertigo; if muscles with the play of health in them are worth more than those drawn up in chronic rheumatism; if an eye quick to catch passing objects is better than one with vision dim and uncertain, then God will require of us efficiency just in proportion to what he has given us. Physical energy ought to be a type of moral power. We ought to have just as good digestion of truth as we have capacity to assimilate food. Our spiritual hearing ought to be as good as our physical hearing; our spiritual taste ought to be as clear as our tongue. Samsons in body, we ought to be giants in moral power. But where you find a great many men who realize that they ought to use their money aright and use their intelligence aright, how few men you find aware of the fact that they ought to use their physical organism aright. With every thump of the heart there is something saying: "Work! work!" and lest we should complain that we have no tools to work with, God gives us our hands and feet, with every knuckle and with every joint and with every muscle saying to us: "Lay hold and do something!" But how often it is that men with physical strength do not serve Christ. They are like a ship full-manned and full-rigged capable of vast tonnage, able to endure all stress of weather, yet swinging idly at the docks when these men ought to be crossing and recrossing the great ocean of human suffering and sin with God's supplies of mercy. How often it is that physical strength is used in doing positive damage or in luxurious ease, when, with sleeves rolled up and bronzed bosom fearless of the shafts of opposition, it ought to be laying hold with all its might to lift up this sunken wreck of a world. It is a most shameful fact that much of the business of the Church and of the world must be done by those comparatively invalided.

Richard Baxter, by reason of his diseases, all his days sitting in the door of the tomb, yet writing over a hundred volumes and sending out an influence for good that will endure as long as the "Saints' Everlasting Rest." Edward Payson, never knowing a well day, yet how he preached and how he wrote, helping thousands of dying souls like himself to swim in a sea of glory. And Robert McCheyne, a walking skeleton, yet you know what he did in Dundee, and how he shook Scotland with zeal for God. Philip Doddridge, advised by his friends because of his illness not to enter the ministry, yet you know what he did for the "Rise and Progress of Religion" in the Church and in the world. Scrofula of Lungs.

I am now 40 years old and have suffered for the last fifteen years with a lung trouble. I have spent thousands of dollars to arrest the march of this disease, but temporary relief was all that I obtained. I was unfit for any manual labor for several years. A friend strongly recommended the use of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), claiming that he himself had been greatly benefited by its use in some lung troubles. I resolved to try it. The results are remarkable. My cough has left me, my strength has returned, and I weigh sixty pounds more than I ever did in my life. It has been three years since I stopped the use of the medicine, but I have had no return of the disease, and there are no aches or weakness felt in my lungs. I do the hardest kind of work. T. J. Hardened Liver.

Five years ago I broke down with kidney and liver complaint and rheumatism.

Since then I have been unable to be about at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were puffed up and filled with water.

All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters. I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case; otherwise I would have been now in my grave.

A TERRIBLE FATE.

An Oil-Tank in Philadelphia Explodes, Scattering the Burning Fluid Over Workmen—One Person Killed Outright and Four Die from Injuries Received.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19.—While fifteen men were repairing a large iron still at the Philadelphia Lubricating Company's works yesterday it exploded and lifted over, throwing out its 150 gallons of crude oil in a fiery mass. The following were burned to death: Alexander Banks, Joseph Robinson, Patrick Boyle, Arthur Gruebler and Charles Marshall. Charles McLean was also badly burned, and will probably die.

For some time past the works have been running to their full capacity, and yesterday morning a gang of fifteen men were set to work to repair a stone foundation of a large iron still which contained one hundred and fifty barrels of crude oil. The work had been partially completed, and some of the men were engaged in plastering the interior walls, when the man-hole of the still was blown off, settling the oil on fire [illegible] over the still and causing the burning oil to fall on the men below. The explosion was followed a few seconds later by a second report and a dense volume of smoke. [illegible] the utmost consternation ensued among the workmen. Considerable time elapsed before any of the fire apparatus reached the scene, by which time the oil which had gushed in the tilted tank and the oil which had flowed to the ground was burning fiercely.

Joseph Robinson was discovered lying on the ground close to a pool of burning oil. His clothing was saturated with oil, a portion of which had been burned. He was terribly burned, and was picked up and carried to the company's works, a portion of the flesh of his right leg came off while a surgeon was engaged in cutting off his pantaloons. He died later in the day.

Alexander Banks was working immediately under the tank when the explosion took place. While the rescuing party were in search of the victims his body was observed, as the wind carried the smoke away, lying on the ground close to the foundation wall and surrounded by blazing oil. One of the men, named Michael Cavanaugh, volunteered to rescue him, and, notwithstanding the protests of his companions, crawled along on the ground after one of the firemen had saturated his clothes with water. When within reach of the unfortunate man he grasped his right foot, and when he made an effort to draw the body out the foot parted from it. Cavanaugh dropped it and hastily reached a place of safety, leaving the body to the flames. Cavanaugh's face and hands were badly burned. A few minutes after Cavanaugh escaped the tank fell, and Bank's body was hidden from view. Charles McLean and Arthur Grueber were also found lying close to the burning still. Several other men who were working close to the still at the time of the explosion were also burned. The loss will reach about $30,000; insurance, $17,000. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

TO PROTECT THE HERDS.

The Cattlemen Ask Congress to Pass New Laws for the Driving Out of Contagious Diseases—Close of the Convention.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—In the convention of cattlemen yesterday morning Thomas Sturgis, of Cheyenne, Wy. T., read a paper treating on live-stock diseases from a commercial standpoint.

Dr. Ames, of Montana, read a series of resolutions on the subject of contagious diseases. They provided for the following: A finance committee of five to collect subscriptions and raise a fund to prosecute means to secure legislation, this committee to act under the direction of the Executive Committee of the National Cattle-Growers' Association; a committee to gather and to give to the newspaper press authentic information regarding contagious diseases, so as to remove popular misconceptions; and a third committee which shall be charged with the presentation and persistent support before Congress at its approaching session, of measures:

For the perfecting of existing laws.

For the creation of adequate provision for national oversight and control of cattle diseases under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

For the appropriation of not less than $1,500,000 for such oversight and control.

For the employment of a sufficient number of expert and competent men.

For the payment by the general Government of a reasonable valuation, upon the basis of value, prior to infection, for animals slaughtered on account of disease and for the due enforcement of such laws.

There was a lively debate on that portion of the resolutions asking the Government to pay for slaughtered diseased cattle. It was adopted in spite of some opposition.

It was resolved by the convention that the manufacture and sale of all compounds intended to take the place of butter should be so regulated by State and National laws, that they should be put upon the markets under their own names, and that all manufacturers of butter who shall introduce into the product any foreign matter for the purpose of adulterating or cheapening it shall be compelled by proper laws to mark all such adulterated compounds. The convention called on each association which had delegates present to endeavor to aid in the suppression of contagious diseases. It decided to urge the Governors of the States to recommend to their respective Legislatures the passage of proper laws authorizing the appointment of sanitary boards. Resolutions regarding the restricting of the free shipment of Southern cattle liable to be affected with Texas fever were presented and laid on the table. After listening to a report on beef canning the convention adjourned without day.

The National Grange.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—The National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry chose these officers yesterday:

Master, P. Darden; Overseer, J. C. Draper, of Worcester, Mass.; Lecturer, Mortimer Whitehead, of New Jersey; Chaplain, A. J. Rose, of Texas; Steward, J. E. Hall, of West Virginia; Assistant Steward, W. H. Stinson, of New Hampshire; Treasurer, F. M. McDowell, of New York; Secretary, John Trimble, of Washington, D. C.; Gate-keeper, Henry Thompson, of Delaware; Ceres, Mrs. Kate Darden, of Mississippi; Pomona, Mrs. S. H. Neal, of Kentucky; Flora, Mrs. [illegible] C. Draper, of Massachusetts; Lady Assistant Steward, Mrs. E. M. Lipscomb, of South Carolina.

Resolutions were adopted recommending biennial State elections; opposing the creation of all unjust monopolies; recognizing the political equality of the two sexes; urging farmers to united and determined efforts in protecting their interests through the ballot, and favoring the promotion of the office of Commissioner of Agriculture to a Cabinet position. A motion in support of the striking shoe-lasters at Brockton was adopted.

Work of Secret-Service Agents.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The Chief of the Secret-Service Division reports that 444 arrests were made during the last year and $205,580 in base money was destroyed. It is estimated that $100,000 in counterfeit $20 silver certificates, $10 and $5 United States notes, and $10 notes of the Third National Bank of Cincinnati are in the hands of counterfeiters. The counterfeiting of coin, especially of nickels, is on the increase. It is recommended that laws be passed prohibiting the manufacture of dies or molds for making fac similies of coins for business purposes, and giving the service authority to act in all cases of frauds against the Government.

Sad Drowning Accident.

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 19.—The Times-Star's (Batavia, O.) special says that about two o'clock yesterday morning a party of five young people coming from Milford to Batavia in a wagon were thrown over an abutment near Stone Lick, ten feet, into fifteen feet of water. Miss [illegible] Begam, aged eighteen; Milton Begam, aged thirteen, and Joseph Berkely, aged twenty-six, were drowned. Charles Page, son of W. H. Page, of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad, and Miss Ella Yager were saved. The bridge burned two or three years ago and no provision was made to keep the horses from running into the chasm.

LITTLE PHIL'S VIEWS.

and, unfortunate as the people of Arizona and New Mexico have been, there is no other man in the army who could do any better or who is more wrapped up in the welfare of the people of that section as regards life, property and business prospects. In regard to this hostile band in Mexico, under the agreement, our officers and men have been treated with consideration and kindness which it is my duty to acknowledge. I take great pleasure in commending General Crook for the admirable disposition of his troops and his steady perseverance under disheartening circumstances.

General Sheridan recommends as a solution of the vexed Indian question that the Government give each Indian family the 320 acres now provided for them by law and buy up the remainder of their reservations at $1.25 per acre, investing the money for the tribes in Government bonds, the interest to be used in lieu of the annual subsidies voted them by Congress for their maintenance, and the principal to be given into their control in the course of time. General Sheridan shows that the Crow Indians have 4,500,000 acres, the Cheyennes and Arapahoes 4,100,000 and the Utes 5,100,000, which could be bought by the Government for this purpose. Some of these lands are worth from $5 to $10 an acre, and could be sold to settlers readily at an average of $1.25 an acre. If the treaties in existence between the tribes and the Government interfere with the execution of this plan General Sheridan suggests that Congress "could easily devise some means of overcoming this difficulty." The report continues:

I can not agree with General Miles in his ideas regarding the Indian Territory, or in his confidence in the ability of the Indian to make himself self-supporting in so short a time. All our experience heretofore does not warrant such confidence, and such opinions should be regarded as [illegible] rather than representative of the army. The processes of civilization must necessarily be slow and will, no doubt, be worked out in time if justness and fair treatment be observed and a steady policy pursued; but the ultimate result is still some distance in the future. When a tribe becomes refractory or has worked itself into a state of open revolt, its temporary transfer to the control of the military for the purpose of discipline, as has recently been done with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in the Indian Territory and the Apaches in Arizona, will be found of benefit; but the permanent control of the Indians is not desired by the army at large. The Seminole Indian scouts now in the vicinity of Fort Clark, Tex. (mentioned in my last report), have not as yet been brought back to the Indian Territory. Sympathy for them is very great, and the injustice they have undergone for about eighteen years has been often referred to without effect. They are a good people, and should be provided for in the Indian Territory.

The Lieutenant-General commends the recommendations of the Adjutant-General in regard to promotions to the rank of field officer; he calls attention to the necessity of concentrating troops near the large cities, where they can be more economically supported, and whence they can be more readily moved; and says the status of the national guard should be regulated by a general law of Congress. The report concludes as follows:

The discipline throughout the army is very good. I have no recommendation to make except to increase the number of men in the companies and to add two more companies and two Majors to each regiment of infantry. I most heartily concur with the remarks of General Schofield on the need of military legislation. His views are of such importance that I transmit them bodily in my report:

"There is a great need in the military service of legislation, under the power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. It is sometimes of supreme importance that the responsibilities of military administration and command be clearly defined by law, and it is important at all times that the rules for the government of the military service be observed like other laws by competent authority after due consideration and under all the light which experience can bring to the aid of legislation. Regulations thus established and subject to change only by Congress would have such a degree of stability as to become the basis of a sound military system, which up to the present time has not existed in this country. Although the regulations have undergone changes almost without number, the most important questions involved in the command and government of the army, which have been the source of constant embarrassment and the cause of much controversy for many years, remain unsettled at the present time. No commanding General, from the highest to the lowest, can know the extent or limit of his authority, and no one can have any staff responsible to him for the faithful execution of his orders."

During the last twenty-five years the country has passed through three momentous crisis wherein these unsettled questions were of vital importance to the Nation, and their decision for the occasion depended solely upon individual opinions. Another such crisis may not be far distant when such a decision might not be so fortunate for the country. Hence, while I present the necessity of a considerable increase of the army, I also suggest as a still greater necessity that laws be established by Congress for the "government and regulation" of the military forces.

A Proposed Monument to General McClellan in Fairmount Park.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18.—At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Fairmount Park Art Association, held yesterday afternoon, it was resolved to establish a fund to be called "The McClellan Memorial Fund," the object of which is to erect by the association in Fairmount Park a suitable memorial to the late General George B. McClellan. It was also resolved that the association contribute $50,000 toward this memorial, providing at least $10,000 additional be raised for that purpose. A. J. Drexel was appointed chairman.

Our Trade with Other Nations.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—The annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shows that the United States stands fourth in the list of nations in respect to foreign commerce, Great Britain leading with a total value of $3,503,877,370, Germany second, and France third. The total value of our foreign trade during the last fiscal year was $1,547,020,316. The most notable features of our foreign trade during the last fiscal year as compared with the trade of 1884 was a decrease in the imports of merchandise of $90,000,000, and a falling off in the exports of gold of $32,000,000.

the final words escaping him being "Merci Jesu." He died without a struggle. Not to exceed twenty persons were permitted within the confines of the barracks to witness the execution, and it was certainly performed with decorum and dispatch. His body was taken in charge by the Coroner, and the verdict usual to all State executions was rendered.

The body of the rebel leader was interred under the scaffold directly after the execution. It will lie there for a few days, and then, in accordance with a codicil of his will, be transported to the cemetery of St. Boniface, at Winnipeg, where it will be buried beside that of his father.

MONTREAL, Can., Nov. 17.—The City Council yesterday afternoon adopted a resolution to adjourn as a "protest against the odious violation of the laws of justice and humanity in the execution of Riel."

Last night a crowd numbering from five to ten thousand marched through the streets to the Champs de Mars, where effigies of Sir Hector Langevin and other members of the Cabinet were burned. Proceeding then to Victoria Square the mob set fire to an effigy of Sir John Macdonald. Several shots were exchanged between the paraders and the police, but no one was injured. The Queen's statue in the square was much blackened. The mob then quietly dispersed.

Everything in the neighborhood of Regina is quiet, but some apprehension is felt that Crowfoot will give trouble, as his demands are daily growing larger, and he is arming and equipping his Indians with arms and ammunition brought from the United States. They are reported to have one thousand ponies. It is stated that all the Indians have left their reservation near Battleford, Fort Pitt and Edmonton, leaving the squaws and children behind. This is regarded as a significant move. Considerable stock has been run off around Medicine Hat within the past few days, and twenty-five lodges of Assiniboines have left Red Pheasant's Reserve, on Battle River, and can not be found. The half-breeds are quiet, and no trouble from them is anticipated.

Riel's career was a stormy one. He was born thirty-nine years ago in St. Boniface, on the west side of the Seine River, Manitoba. He began attending school at the age of nine and at eleven went to Montreal, where he attended the Jesuit College. He returned to his home in 1866. Subsequently he went to St. Paul, where he obtained employment as a dry goods clerk. He remained there but a short time. He then returned home and engaged in farming until 1869, when, at the time of the Red River rebellion, he was asked by the half-breeds of Manitoba to be their leader. In 1868 the British Parliament passed the "Rupert land act," under provisions of which the Hudson Bay company sold to the Dominion the territory known as the northwest territory. The company received $1,500,000 in money and valuable grants of land. The Indians and half-breeds had farms with narrow frontages on the river. These farms were long, narrow strips, often running two miles back from the St. Lawrence, the Ottawa and Saguenay Rivers. The surveyors began to survey this country into square blocks. This was the first cause of quarrel. By the new arrangements old associations and family ties were threatened with disruption, and the tenure of land became uncertain. One day Riel put his foot on the surveyors' chain and ordered the surveyors to quit work. The order was obeyed. In the fall of 1869 he took possession of old Fort Garry, now Fort Winnipeg, and armed his followers with three hundred rifles found in the stores of the Hudson Bay Company. From there they issued their well-known bill of rights. A counter-insurrection was attempted by the loyalists, and one Scott, an English-Canadian, was shot by Riel's order. All of the leading English-Canadians at Fort Garry were taken prisoners. After the collapse of the insurrection Riel and a few of his followers took refuge in the United States. By act of Parliament the fugitive Chief was banished for five years. When his term of banishment expired he returned to Manitoba. In [illegible] of the [illegible] that he would be killed before [illegible] his seat in the House of Commons. A company of soldiers was secreted in an anteroom, and at one time it was feared a riot would ensue. He left his seat when the opening prayer was concluded, and never returned. The outbreak of last spring was the outgrowth of the one of 1869. The dissatisfaction of the half-breeds culminated March 27 of this year. Riel became desperate and made a raid on the town of Duck Lake, where all of the inhabitants were massacred. The mobilization of the Canadian Army was ordered, and 2,000 men, under General Middleton, were sent to the scene of the uprising. In the meantime Riel and his army captured fifty-seven villages. Riel's forces were defeated by Middleton, and Colonel Otter routed the forces under Chief Poundmaker, Riel's Lieutenant. On the 12th of May the war was practically ended by the defeat of Riel by Middleton's army. Two days afterward Riel surrendered. After many legal wranglings his trial began at Regina on July 28, and ended August 1 with a verdict of guilty and a capital sentence. An appeal was taken to the Imperial privy council, but that body refused to interfere and threw the whole weight of the responsibility upon Sir John A. Macdonald.

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL.

SMITH & PARMELEE, Editors and Proprietors.

CHARLEVOIX, : MICHIGAN.

A THANKSGIVING.

'Twas many a year ago, dear, 'twas many a year ago,
You sat in the singers' seat, dear, and I in the pew below,
And the parson preached and prayed, dear, and bade the faithful raise
To God a true Thanksgiving of earnest prayer and praise.

To me the year just ended had brought no dole or dearth;
The fire was burning brightly upon my lonely hearth;
I had seen the spring's good promise 'neath the autumn's smile unfold,
I had seen the harvests gathered when the green had turned to gold.

I knew that, counting treasures by every outward sign,
Many a man might envy the blessings that were mine;
They saw my fertile acres, they saw my gathered store,
With such a fair inheritance, what could a man ask more?

But I listened to the preaching in no glad Thanksgiving mood,
For my life was sadly empty, though the harvests had been good;
For what to me were flocks and herds, and bursting barn and bin,
When the treasure I'd have died for was the one I could not win?

I can see you, dear, this moment, as you looked that very day,
See the roses in your bonnet, see the simple gown of gray;
See the tenor close beside you, what a handsome man was he!
I could see his tender glances, 'twas a bitter sight to see.

How I envied that poor tenor! how I hated him to-day,
As your voices in the anthem rose and mingled into one!
I'd have given, as I stood there, for the music in his throat,
All the best of my possessions; and I could not sing a note.

And when the service ended, and we heard the last amen,
I waited in the entry—that is what we called it then—
And the eyes met just a moment, and your glance dear was so kind,
That, although the handsome tenor followed but a step behind,

I dared to walk beside you, down the steps and through the gate;
And then, a little further, where our paths should part,
I sought your eyes again, dear, with a question in my own,
And so it came about, dear, that we neither walked alone.

Home through the somber woodland we strolled that happy day,
And it seemed the sun was shining, though the sky was dull and gray,
Though the dead leaves whirled about us, yet the world seemed full of bloom,
And our two hearts thrilled with summer through the autumn's chilling gloom.

And we won a happy knowledge, you and I, dear, each from each,
Heavenly sweet the revelations of our silence or our speech;
I who had not dared a hope, dear, with a wonder glad and swift,
Lifted up a great Thanksgiving for this gift of every gift.

And we laughed about the tenor, with his voice so strong and true,
And my envy turned to pity, as a lucky man's will do,
For I knew that he would barter all the music that should roll
From his singing throat henceforward, for the song within my soul.

All the wealth I had not cared for in a blissful instant grew
Very precious, since the future was to see it shared with you;
But I thought that I could give you, well I knew could ever be
Such a priceless, gracious giving as the gift you gave to me.

And the day, begun so sadly, ended in a dream of bliss,
That has lasted all the years, dear, from that happy hour to this;
Through life's smiles and tears, my darling, 'neath the skies of blue or gray,
We have thanked the dear God always for that blest Thanksgiving Day.

UNCLE SIMON'S ADVICE,

And the Havoc It Wrought in His Own Household.

OLD FARM, October 30, 18—.

George Maxwell was sitting with me when the mail brought me a letter from Uncle Simon Jones. To my surprise, the letter contained a request that I should come up and make him a visit. Uncle Simon is George's great-uncle as well as mine, and for the past two years George's home has been at Old Farm. Nobody knows why the arrangement was broken up, but it was, and George is now earning his living as a clerk in the bank at X——.

"Shall I go, George?" I asked.

"Please yourself," said George, laughing. "Don't make a permanent engagement, though, for I don't believe you can stand it long."

I reflected. The school in which I am a teacher has been broken up by scarlet-fever, I have been unable to obtain another engagement, and my money is fast melting away. Under the circumstances I could do nothing better than accept, especially as George assured me that he should not feel at all aggrieved by my decision. So I wrote to Uncle Simon that I would come for a visit, and here I am.

Uncle Simon is rather a fine-looking man, tall, broad-shouldered and ruddy, with a fine, full beard of silvery white. On the way home from the station he startled me once by asking, abruptly: "I forget whether you know my nephew George Maxwell?"

My heart gave a thump. Know George? Well! But I only said: "Oh, yes; I have known him all my life."

"I was disappointed in George—much disappointed," Uncle Simon went on. "He promised well at first, but he had one great fault. I hope that you are not above taking advice from your elders and betters, young lady?"

I was a little startled at the sharpness of his manner, but assured him that I am always grateful for good advice; not thinking it necessary to add that I use my own discretion in regard to following it.

Old Farm is not much of a farm, after all. Since George left, Uncle Simon has let most of the land. The house is large, low and rambling, by no means imposing, but very quaint and comfortable, crowning the topmost swell of the lawn with its creamy, rough-cast walls. There is but one servant in the kitchen, a middle-aged woman, whose face wears an expression of constant irritation and vexation. It cleared a little when she saw me, but clouded again, as she shook her head slowly, saying, "Ah, you won't stand it long; not long, you won't—worse luck!"

"Why not, Amanda?" I asked. But she only shook her head and groaned in reply.

I don't see why one should not be very happy here, unless, indeed, Uncle Simon is a confirmed lunatic, as they half lead me to believe. However, I will wait until I see some definite sign of lunacy before I take fright.

November 5.

I had a visitor yesterday. Such a pretty girl! a plump, brown-eyed, dimpled little thing, with a wonderful peachy-pearl complexion and masses of golden brown hair. I had begun to wonder whether Uncle Simon has any neighbors, for not a one have had as yet crossed the threshold. Miss Lulu Belden seems inclined to be sociable, however.

"I am so glad you have come!" she began, before she was well seated. "I know Mr. Johnes has been dreadfully lonely since Geo—Mr. Maxwell left, though wild horses would not draw the admission from him."

That "Geo—" rankled in my mind, and I am afraid that I did not respond as cordially as I might have done. However, Miss Belden seems a bright, innocent little lady, and, after all, it is natural enough that she should call him George, as she did after a while without stopping to correct herself.

"Did George tell you why he left?" she asked.

"He has no idea that I know," cried Miss Lulu. "George is a good fellow. I think I must tell you though, for I have made a guess which may be right or not—"

"Don't!" I cried, putting my fingers into my ears. "I don't want to know anything but what comes to me naturally. It would only make things harder for me."

"Perhaps you are right," said Miss Lulu, after meditating a moment. "I can't avoid calling him George—of course that would be too absurd—but I do think it high time that I began to call him Mr. Maxwell. It is quite enough for one woman to call a man by his first name. She seems to know all about me, and about Mr. Maxwell's and my childish intimacy. I answered all her questions about him as well as I could, and she left at last, after making me promise to come and see her very soon.

Uncle Simon brought another visitor home to tea with him, a Mr. Arthur Parker—rather a good-looking young fellow, tall and fair, with nice honest eyes and a frank smile. Somehow, though, I fancied that he wished himself anywhere else, for a cat in a strange garret would have been at ease compared to him. As for me, I was meditating upon Miss Lulu's visit, and I am afraid I was rather stupid and absent-minded. I was horrified, at last, to catch myself in the midst of a tremendous yawn. Just as I recovered myself, in dismay and perturbation, I caught Mr. Parker's eye. There was a sympathetic twinkle in it which, instead of embarrassing, quite reassured me, and we burst out laughing simultaneously. I was afraid that Uncle Simon would be vexed, but he smiled and beamed as I had never seen him do before. When Mr. Parker had left, Uncle Simon expressed his approbation in modified terms.

"It isn't generally well to yawn in company, Maddie, but this time it was, perhaps, the best thing you could do, as it broke the ice completely. Parker is an uncommonly fine fellow, and I was glad to see that you made a good impression."

Before I went to bed I scribbled a short note to Geo—Mr. Maxwell, as I had promised, telling him of my safe arrival, and mentioning the visits of our two neighbors. Of both I spoke in terms of unbounded praise. Why? I wonder. Perhaps Mr. Maxwell will know, but I don't.

November 12.

I think I am beginning to understand why people consider Uncle Simon difficult to live with. It began the day after I came, but it began temperately, out of deference to my rank as a stranger. It was spiced, too, with compliments.

"Niece, you walk well—very well; but if you would put down your feet a little more firmly, the effect would be better."

"Niece, you have a very smooth, pretty complexion, but it is a trifle dark for blue. Red, now, would be much more becoming. Take my advice, and always wear red."

Uncle Simon has placed a horse at my disposal. I always supposed that I rode tolerably well, but after my first ride with him I could only conclude that I was a most "awful duffer" at it.

"Hands lower, body firmer. That's better, but—ah, well, keep on trying. Whip a little higher. Don't be discouraged. We'll make a horsewoman of you yet. You have been dreadfully taught, but that's not your fault."

It was an immense relief when Uncle Simon suddenly shot from my side toward a man who was laying a stone fence. The man no sooner saw Uncle Simon, however, than he fairly took to his heels, and bolted across the fields. Uncle Simon returned to my side with a crest-fallen air.

"It is the most extraordinary thing," he said. "I have been trying to give Ben Grimes some idea of the proper way of laying fences. I thought he was getting quite a fair idea of it, but lately I have never been able to get speech of him."

"But, Uncle Simon," I said, "isn't fence-laying his trade?"

"Eh? oh, certainly," said Uncle Simon, looking puzzled. "But what of that? Do you suppose half the men in the world understand their own trades? Lookers-on see most of the game, you know."

It was singular to see how every man we approached suddenly found it necessary to dart into the house or across the fields. If Uncle Simon and I had been lepers, they could not have fled faster nor more persistently. Just one stood his ground—a sturdy, red-faced countryman, who awaited us doggedly.

"Look a-here, squire," he burst out, before Uncle Simon could speak, "if you've got any 'advice' to give me, you might as well save your breath. I took it once—more fool I!—and what did it do for me? You remember my new wagon—brand spick-and-span new, and cost two hundred dollars? And you remember my bay horse that I was going to sell because he balked? 'Don't sell him,' says you; 'take my advice;' and I did. Next time he wouldn't go I took your advice and built a fire under him, and what did that horse do? Just stood stock-still till the fire began to scorch; then he gave a jump—just one—and not another step would he budge. There he stood, still as a post, and that wagon burning to cinders at his tail. Jumped just far enough to bring it over the fire, he did. We had to cut the traces and let her burn at last. That's all, squire; and if ever you get me to take another bit of your advice, you'll have to pay me for that wagon first off."

The man turned on his heel and walked away contemptuously.

"People are so pig-headed!" was Uncle Simon's only comment; and I responded, devoutly, "They are—they are, indeed."

Uncle Simon admires Miss Lulu very much. He is fifty at least, but I can not mistake his frequent hints that some time this home will, he hopes, be her home. From the manner in which his brow clouds over whenever Geo—Mr. Maxwell's and her names happen to occur in the same sentence, I have begun to form a shrewd idea of the cause of the rupture. It is impossible that Lulu can return Uncle Simon's admiration; it is quite possible that she should return that of—some one else. Hence jealous complications, resulting in a final rupture. "He who runs may read."

I wonder whether she ever hears from Mr. Maxwell? I thought he would have answered my note before this, especially after begging me so to write.

November 19.

I have begun upon a new plan. Things are becoming monotonous, and it is time to turn the tables. Uncle Simon, having criticised nearly everything else about me, began this morning upon my hair.

"Niece, you don't wear your hair properly. There is but one way for a woman to wear it; that is, plainly parted and coiled low down behind. That way of piling it all up on the top of your head is quite out of character."

"Uncle, I am glad you mentioned it, for it gives me courage. I have often wanted to tell you that you don't wear your beard properly. There is but one way for a man to wear it; that is, with a neatly-shaved chin, and only a mustache and long whiskers left."

Uncle Simon stared at me. "Are you crazy?" he said. "Nice I should look, at my time of life! But about your hair: I'll show you how to fix it, if you like. You don't know how it would improve your appearance."

"Indeed, uncle, I am in earnest," I said. "You don't know how much better you would look. I'll show you how to shave, if you like."

Uncle Simon began to see. He stared at me for a moment; then with a sort of snort, half amusement, half disgust, he got up from the table and began to fill and light his pipe. As for me, I took up my knitting and went on with it calmly. He contemplated me for a while through the smoke clouds. Then he said, "Niece, you don't hold your needles right."

"Do you know how to knit, uncle?" I asked.

"I? Why, certainly not; but that does not hinder my knowing how it should be done."

"No," I said. "But, uncle—pray forgive me; but the way you smoke really distresses me. You don't fill nor hold your pipe right, and—"

"And pray, miss," he said, "do you know how to smoke?"

"Certainly not," I said; "but that does not hinder my knowing how it should be done, does it?"

"Well, it just does," said Uncle Simon.

But I remonstrated: "Not at all, uncle. I've seen lots of men smoke, and I know just how it should be done. You see—"

"Will you let me and my pipe alone?" said Uncle Simon.

"Yes," said I, "if you'll leave me and my knitting alone."

Uncle Simon's eyes twinkled a little, but he said nothing, only walked into the kitchen to take it out of Amanda, I suppose. If she were not the best creature in the world she never would stand his constant "advice."

November 21.

We had quite a little excitement here [illegible]

her than usual, quite brightening up under Lulu's chatter. I am beginning to suspect him of an inclination in that quarter, the more so as Uncle Simon watched them jealously, "cutting in" at every opportunity. His face quite beamed when I took pity upon him, and inveigled Mr. Parker into a corner, leaving the field free for him. Talking to Mr. Parker [illegible] more up hill work than ever, with his glances straying away every moment to Lulu's corner. So it was a relief when Uncle Simon went into the dining-room to attend to the fire. One of the many ways in which Uncle Simon maddens Amanda is by poking and prying continually into every stove and fire-place in the house, under the firm conviction that no one can attend properly to fires but himself. After he had left the room Lulu and Mr. Parker drifted together, while I kept my seat, which commanded the door of the dining-room across the hall. Suddenly, through the crack of the dining-room door, I saw a flash of brilliant light; then came an insane scuffling and skurrying, muffled shouts and ejaculations in Uncle Simon's voice. Of course we all rushed into the dining-room, to find Uncle Simon incapable for once of giving advice, as he capered wildly about the room, quite uncertain what to do. In the course of his explorations he had taken out the ash pan and set it upon a newspaper, to preserve the carpet from injury. Being hot, as ash pans are apt to be, it had smouldered for a moment, and then flashed suddenly into a blaze. Mr. Parker was the only one of us who had any sense. He took in the situation at once, and, rushing from the room, returned with some dark object, which he threw over the burning paper, pressing and trampling it down until the flames were completely smothered. Uncle Simon looked at the ruins for a moment, as Mr. Parker removed the charred remains of his new overcoat.

"For once," I thought, "Uncle Simon will find it impossible to give advice." But I was mistaken.

"It is all Amanda's fault," said Uncle Simon. "What does she mean by keeping her ash pans so hot? I must go and speak to her about it."

Even Amanda, the long-suffering, blazed up this time as hotly as the paper had done. I heard her voice, choked with angry tears; but any idea of the mischief Uncle Simon was doing I had not, for Lulu was whispering in my ear:

"I had a letter from George Maxwell to-day. He wants to know how you are getting on, and why you don't write to him. What shall I say?"

Say? Let her say what she pleases. If he wants to know about me, let him ask me himself. It is an impertinence to send messages in this roundabout way. What is it to me?

11 P. M.

Just as I wrote the last word, Amanda came to my door.

"I can't stand it no longer, miss," she said. "It ain't the work I mind. No, miss, it ain't the work, but it's this beastly nag, nag, nagging, that an angel of light couldn't stand, let alone the old fellow himself, saving his presence! He must teach me to boil and bake and roast and fry, to knead bread and scrub floors and make beds, and the dear knows what all! I've got a sick sister and a lame brother, and he gives good wages, or I couldn't have stood it as long as I have. I'm at the end of my patience now, though, and good luck to him with the next one! I pinned a dishcloth to his coat-tail once," said Amanda, with a hysteric giggle, "and he wore it all day. I took it off at night unbeknownst to him, and he's been wondering ever since what made folks laugh so that day. I'm sorry to leave you, miss, but him I can't stand, nor won't. Only one thing, miss, don't you go cooking for him, if he goes down on his bended knees. A saint's own temper couldn't stand it, and you'd find wrinkles coming round your pretty eyes before you knew it."

No, Amanda, I shall not cook for him—not I; I'll starve first. I wonder whether breakfast will be early to-morrow? I wonder will it be good? "The day will come, and we shall be wiser," as Gregory Lopez was fond of saying.

November 22.

It wasn't early, and it wasn't good. I was awakened about eight o'clock by a modest knock at my door. I answered through the key-hole.

"Amanda has gone," said Uncle Simon; and I expressed all due surprise. "Can you cook?" was the next inquiry, to which I returned a prompt and decided negative.

Having by this time struggled into a wrapper, I opened my door to find Uncle Simon looking uncommonly thoughtful.

"You are sure you can not cook, Maddie?" he asked again.

"Dear uncle, what chance have I ever had to learn? But that does not matter, for you excel in it, you know."

"Do I?" said Uncle Simon, dubiously.

"But I replied briskly: "Why certainly. How often I have heard you giving Amanda directions, and wondered at your skill! What a breakfast we shall have! I am hungry already at the thought of it."

Uncle Simon went down-stairs slowly, very slowly, and I am afraid that I laughed to myself while completing my toilette.

The cloth was crooked, when I went down at last; the plates didn't match; there was not a spoon upon the table; but all that was nothing. Such coffee! such toast! such black, chippy scrambled eggs! and such a woful Uncle Simon! It was wicked, but I laughed until I cried as I surveyed the scene.

"I have always heard," said Uncle Simon, "that it is easier to do things yourself than to tell others how, but I begin to doubt it."

Uncle Simon went off on a servant-hunt after breakfast, and I washed up the dishes and put things away, tolerably certain that I should not be found fault with this time. Lulu came in while I was about it.

"It's precious little use for him to go servant-hunting," she said. "People about here know him a great deal too well."

It took only one look at Uncle Simon's face, when he came in at last, to know that his mission had been a dead failure. He glanced at the table, still covered with its red cloth.

"Dinner will be late to-day, Uncle Simon," I said.

Uncle Simon groaned, but said nothing, and presently I heard him knocking the things about in the kitchen. Feel mean? Of course I did. Under any other circumstances I should have tried my hand at cooking, and no doubt made a thorough botch of it. As it is, I feel a "masterly inactivity" to be the only safe course.

The door opens and Uncle Simon's head appears.

"How long do they generally boil potatoes, Maddie?"

"Till they're done," I reply, promptly.

"Yes, but when are they done?"

"When they are fit to eat."

We do not seem likely to get much nearer to it than this, and at present the success of the dinner seems problematical.

5 P. M.

A steak, very black outside and very pink and transparent within, and potatoes with hard lumps in the middle—that was our dinner. Luckily, Amanda left us plenty of bread and butter, and the preserve closet is well stocked. After dinner I gave Uncle Simon a little advice in my turn, and we sallied out in search of provisions which need little or no cooking. With plenty of eggs and canned provisions we may carry on the siege for a while. I shall keep my eye upon Amanda, and am not without hope of inveigling her back when Uncle Simon is quite tired of the present state of affairs.

November 26.

I think both Uncle Simon and I weigh a few pounds less than we did a week ago. Under our starvation regime Uncle Simon has waxed meeker and meeker every day. When it came to the prospect of eating a Thanksgiving dinner of his own cooking, he fairly collapsed. Then I decided that the time had come, and went in search of Amanda. She was loth to come back at first, but yielded to my representations of the altered state of affairs. I don't think Uncle Simon has been into the kitchen once since her return. In other respects he is gradually becoming more like himself, though decidedly subdued.

And now about my own private affairs. It was on my way back from Amanda's that I met him. "Him," of course, means George Maxwell. He was looking very fierce and angry when we first met, but softened a little as we shook hands. I supposed that he had come to see Lulu Belden, and took very good care to express no surprise at his presence. I chattered on for a while about the state of affairs at Old Farm, but he stopped me suddenly.

"Don't talk about such things now, Maddie. You know why I have come. Don't pretend to ignore it."

I stared at him. I had no idea what he meant, nor what answer he expected.

"I have come," he continued, "to ask you why not one of my letters has ever been answered—why I have never heard a word from you since that first note, which was [illegible] to a fit of laughter which must have convinced the most incredulous. "But what do you mean by your letters? I have never had a line from you since I have been here."

George stared in his turn. "I have written to you six times," he said. "Finally, I grew wild, and wrote to Lulu Belden to inquire about you. Her answer told me that you were well, and that was all. At last I could stand it no longer, and came to see for myself. But what on earth can have become of the letters?"

Evidently the wisest course was to go to the Post-office and ask about them. The first inquiry brought forth the entire budget, which I grasped as one who has found a treasure.

"Why in the world were they not given to Mr. Johnes when he asked for Miss Barry's letters?" asked George; and the Postmaster laughed.

"He never asked for them, and we didn't know who Miss Barry was. Mr. Johnes doesn't come here any more for his mail. He has his letters sent to Eastbourne, three miles away."

"What does he do that for?" George naturally asked.

The Postmaster hesitated. "Well, you see—you're some kin to him, and may be you know his little ways. It's about a month ago now that he wanted to show us how to sort the mail—by the initials of the first name instead of the last. We didn't just feel like taking his advice, and so—"

"I see," said George; and we both laughed.

"So you were not deeply smitten with Parker, after all?" said George.

"Not I; but what about you and Lulu Belden?" I asked.

"You know, of course, that this is the rock upon which Uncle Simon and I split," said George.

"Because you both admired her, and he was jealous," I said, sagely; at which George fairly roared.

"Not exactly. Because he wanted me to admire her and I wouldn't, or rather I admired somebody else more. He 'advised' me to address her, and when I declined, further 'advised' me to leave the farm, which I did."

There is no use writing down any more of that episode. There is no fear of my ever forgetting it, and as this journal is written solely for my own eyes, it would clearly be a work of supererogation.

November 29.

Yesterday George ate his Thanksgiving dinner with me. Uncle Simon was dazed at first by the news which we had to tell him, but, after some cogitation, was moved to look upon it favorably. More than that, it seems that I am something of a favorite with him, in view of which fact George is to be taken back into favor. Next week I go back to my school, the scarlet-fever having disappeared, and George will take my place here—until next spring, and then something may happen which will bring me back to reign over the old place as its mistress.

"It isn't what I meant for either of you," said Uncle Simon, ruefully. "You know what my plans were for you, George, and Madeline there I had intended for young Parker. I promised him the first chance."

I fairly jumped as Uncle Simon revealed the plot, which I had never suspected. No wonder Mr. Parker always looked like a "fish out of water" in my presence.

"The only thing I can see now," continued Uncle Simon, thoughtfully, "is for Lulu and Parker to put up with your leavings. I shall advise them—"

"No, dear Uncle Simon, for Heaven's sake, no more advice!" I cried. "Just see the havoc it has wrought in your own household, and would you go on scattering it recklessly about the world? You will have the universe in a blaze."

Uncle Simon laughed, rather sheepishly, and was silent.—Helen F. More, in Harper's Bazar.

SCHUMANN'S TRIALS.

A Composer's Difficulties and Ultimate Success.

When the time came for Schumann to graduate and determine his profession, every emotion within him prompted him to adopt a musical career; but his mother was determined he should choose the law. She felt how few achieve success in so difficult and uncertain a profession as music, and she feared her son would be unable to support himself. Schumann, on the other hand, feared nothing so much as to be untrue to his highest light, and that light pointed steadily toward music. Money was as nothing to him if only he could devote himself to his art; and he had faith in himself, he felt that he should be successful. He knew that it would require steady and persistent toil, but he believed that in the end he would make a musician of himself. Finally, he persuaded his mother to place the decision in the hands of Friedrich Wieck, a friend and a well-known musician, Schumann agreeing that if, after six years of work at the piano, he gave no sign of success, he would turn to the practice of law. Wieck, after warning Schumann of the incessant and almost discouraging work which lay before him, advised him, if he were willing to brave all this, to become a musician. Schumann now made his home at Liepsic, where he attacked his work with great enthusiasm, practicing all day. In his anxiety to attain success, he invented a machine which was intended for the equal training of every finger; by this contrivance, his third finger remained up in a vertical position, while he played with the others; but the tendons became so strained that he lamed the troublesome finger, and all thought of a career as a pianist had to be put aside. Poor Schumann! after all his struggles and sacrifices, was this to be the end? We can well imagine the gloom which oppressed him, as he felt that his brilliant hopes were crushed, and everything pointed to the law. But music claimed him; he could not escape, and now he began to compose. He had always been rather self-willed, and suffered from having no one to guide his musical education. Unfortunately he had almost neglected musical composition, but now set about to repair his mistake. He should have grown up in this part of his art, and he was never quite compensated for the loss of early training.—Agatha Tunis, in St. Nicholas.

How to Kill the Blues.

Generally speaking, if you are troubled with "the blues," and can not tell why, you may be certain that it springs from physical weakness. Instead of lying on the sofa and courting painful ideas, if you are a desperate lover, a hypochondriac or a valetudinarian, you should be up and stirring yourself. The blood of a melancholy man is thick and slow, creeping sluggishly through his veins, like muddy water in a canal. The blood of your merry, chirping philosopher is clear and quick, brisk as newly broached champagne. Try, therefore, to set your blood in motion. Try, rather, what a smart walk will do for you; set your pegs in motion on rough, rocky ground, or hurry them up a steep, cragged hill; build stone walls; swing an ax over a pile of hickory or rock-maple; turn a grindstone; dig ditches; practice "ground and lofty tumbling," pour water into sieves with the Danaides, or, with Sisyphus, "up the high hill heave a huge round stone;" in short, do anything that will start the perspiration, and you will soon cease to have your brains lined with black, as Burton expresses it, or to rise in the morning as Cowper did, "like an in- [illegible]

ABOUT PHOTOGRAPHS.

How Persons Should Dress When They Have Their Pictures Taken.

How to dress when sitting for a photograph is a serious question at the time, and one that compels considerable thought. Many people find their photographs but faint likenesses of the original, and for this there are several reasons; among the first is that in all probability we each look most kindly on our own faces when seen in the mirror. It is almost positive that we are not positively familiar with our own features. Witness the shiver with which we receive the declaration: "How much you look like Mrs. So-and-so!" when we do not think that person the type of beauty in which we belong, and with what a thrill of satisfaction we hear the same declaration when it coincides with our own wishes of resemblances. This feeling, no doubt, is at the bottom of our satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the results of the photographer's skill. Better results could be obtained, sometimes, if the subject were dressed in conformity with the laws of light.

A prominent photographer not long since said.

"Too many think they have nothing to do personally with the photographs. They can dress in any manner, wear anything, pose as pleases them, and they will be taken artistically. This is an erroneous impression. You take a lady with a mass of white around her neck, and after she is photographed that white will detract from the look of her face. The contrast between the stuff and the flesh tints in life are lost in the likeness, to the detriment of the facial expression. The high-sleeve dresses of to-day are ugly, and distort the form. High dressing about the neck is to be avoided for ladies. The Greek style of hair-dressing, close to the head, rather plain in front, and twisted into a coil at the back of the neck, is the only sensible way for a lady to be photographed. It shows off her head prettily, and always looks refined and artistic. High coiffures, waves, bangs, frizzes and other devices for cranium ornamentation may be the rage, but in a photograph they look ridiculous and foolish after the fashion has changed. A low neck in a dress is becoming to nearly every lady in a picture, for it gives a chance at head-posing which is not affected by collars, ruches, etc., that extend almost to the chin.

"The clothing worn by men is inartistic, and hides the outlines of their figures; particularly their pantaloons, which are as ungraceful as can be imagined. American men, as a rule, have long necks and sloping shoulders; for this reason they can wear tolerably high shirt collars. The neatest neckwear of this class is the rolling collar, always stylish and effective in a photograph. Men ought never to wear anything else when going to sit for a picture; that is, if their necks are not too long and can stand the low collar. A short man ought never to wear a sack coat; it destroys the lines of his form. In a Prince Albert garment a fellow can nearly every time look first rate in a photograph. There are no accepted rules for dressing either sex for a visit to a gallery. If a person has taste in clothes, and takes the hints a good artist will afterward give him, no fault is likely to be found with the work.—Christian Union.

—The sexton of Connecticut graveyard says that an English gentleman, who visited the place last summer "sifted three graves" to find a signet ring believed to have been buried with its wearer, one of the earliest settlers of Connecticut. The ring was wanted to make good a claim to certain property in England, question being raised as to the authenticity of the impression on certain seals. The necessary permission having been procured, the Englishman, a lawyer, representing a well-known family, sifted with the utmost care the three graves, but the dust of [illegible]

I wonder if we
Do not sometimes see
That which we ardently covet,
Like the grapes, too high
For us to get nigh,
No matter how much we love it,

And not worth the waste
Of our labor, our time or our thought.

TOM'S FAIRY.

A Sure-Enough Thanksgiving, and Where It Came From.

It was only Aunt Nannie after all, though Tom would have you believe it was a real fairy with wings of silver gauze and a wand—like the one in his story book of Jack and the Beanstalk.

It was only Aunt Nannie, but when I say that I say a great deal, and I feel like going back to cross out that word only, for fear it may seem to take from her power.

If you could see her you would laugh at the word power in connection with her. She was such a little woman. She looked as if you could carry her in one hand; but indeed one must needs have a high hand to carry her. In all disputed points she carried herself so well that she generally "carried the day," too.

Well Aunt Nannie was planning a dinner party for next day. She had invited Mr. and Mrs. Stay-at-home, Mr. Growler and Miss Nobody's-own to Thanksgiving dinner.

She would have out her very best china and silver, her snowiest cloth, her prettiest crystal and then such a good dinner as she would prepare!

Her mouth fairly watered as she thought over the dainties she would give to these less favored friends. For Aunt Nannie just loved to see people happy about her, and her kindness went further than that, she loved to make them happy by her own effort.

Many a weary night her frail little body knew, from having given too much strength in the day to the care of others.

What a little body she was, to be sure! Just a patch of goodness, if I may call her so, but a patch that mended many a torn life and made whole many a rent in pocket-book or heart-strings.

Somebody laughingly called her "the little straight up and down woman," because her soft, black dress clung so closely to her slim figure, and it was not a bad name for her either, for, in matters of right and wrong, she was the most decided character I ever knew.

Well, she was this morning in one of her happy moods and when the door opened and Mrs. Williams, her friend from up town, came in, Aunt Nannie rose to meet her with a bright welcome.

Mrs. Williams had many things to tell and to ask.

How much cream did she use in Charlotte Russe for eight persons? did she clear her wine-jelly with egg shells? was Mrs. Prundlit coming to her dinner? and did she know that the Smiths had invited the new doctor to their house? and Ella just home from abroad. Wouldn't there be a grand display in that dinner.

Well, it wasn't for her to criticise, but she did think if they would care for their own relations, the Brownwells, it would look better. They were so poor, the Brownwells, and since Mr. B.'s accident at the mill, he had never been able to resume his business life.

"If they were as near me in the matter of relationship as they are in the matter of houses, I should feel that I ought to help them, but they are nothing to me except as far as common humanity is concerned, even if they do live next door."

So said Mrs. Williams as she chattered on this topic and that, and when she rose to go it was with cheery kindness in her pretty face and a heart overflowing with good will, so long as that kindness and good will did not cost her any particular effort. After the door closed upon her visitor Aunt Nannie stood thoughtful for a few moments and then began to busy herself once more about the dinner preparations for the next day.

But she moved very slowly this time, and there were two words ringing in her ears. "Common humanity." Was it true then that one's next door neighbor was no more than that?

Aunt Nannie had known these Brownwells in their happier days, when the father was a successful merchant. She and Mrs. Brownwell had often been thrown together in hospital work and in their flower mission. The children at the Brownwell house learned to love the sweet, pure face of mamma's friend, and called her affectionately "Aunt Nannie," as if to claim some relationship to one so good and kind—so that Tom was not unknown to her, as she stood thinking of him among the rest, this cold morning, and planning how to bring warmth and cheer into that home of theirs.

Their lives had only drifted apart somewhat on account of Mrs. Brownwell's active home life and her own failing health, neither being free to join in the work for the public good as heretofore.

"Well," said Aunt Nannie, at length, shaking her pretty head in a decided way, "I shall be a real Thanksgiving dinner in the Brownwell house, even if this party gets no farther than the soup course."

Now, when that little woman made up her mind "there was an end on it." The good she willed toward others was bound to be carried out, and you might "depend on it." Therefore it was that an hour later found this same frail little woman stepping into her carriage, with a list in her hand as long as the hand which held it, and a basket stowed away beneath the coachman's feet, which same basket was destined to carry many good things before it should cry "Hold! enough!" From [illegible]

oysters, a bunch of crisp celery, some fine apples from the market, a mince pie and a big cake from the baker's; and last of all Aunt Nannie drove to the florist's and got a great bunch of the pretty, bright chrysanthemums, yellow and white, to make the whole basket look gay.

Oh, how pretty and tempting it did look! Aunt Nannie forgot all about feeling tired in her eager gladness over her purchases.

The last thing that went into the basket was a card saying merely "Little Tom's Thanksgiving dinner," and then off went James through the gloaming to deliver the precious bundle.

Now we will leave Aunt Nannie, and follow the basket, for if I were to tell you how weary her journeying about town had made her, how she had to lie on her lounge all next day instead of being at the head of her table as she had hoped to be, it would make you feel sorry, and that is not what I am telling you this for, but rather, to make you glad.

Aunt Nannie was glad—glad way to the bottom of her heart—and so I will tell you only what she would have told—the happy side—and leave out the shadows from my pencil sketch this time, though you may guess they are there.

When James reached the door of the Brownwells, Tom himself came to open it.

"For Mrs. Brownwell!" said James, in his deep voice, and placing the basket on the door sill, was off in a trice, leaving Tom half stunned by such treasures of sight and smell as came to him from its contents.

"Mamma!" screamed Tom, "do come and see! Here is Thanksgiving sure enough! You must have been joking when you said we had nothing but potatoes for dinner to-morrow, or else the fairies have heard me wishing today, for here is celery and apples, and and—mince-pie and (his voice growing louder) a real turkey and cake and oh, Mamma, flowers, too!"

Mrs. Brownwell's heart was full, there was a big lump in her throat which would not be swallowed as she saw the thoughtful present, and when she discovered the little card, whose writing needed no name to tell its author, she said "yes, Tom, it was our good fairy. Nobody else could have known just what would make us all so happy."

And Tom never knew anything else but that that pie and turkey came straight from Titania's throne.—Marjorie Fleming, in School and Home.

DISAGREEABLE THINGS.

A Bit of Advice by "Aunt Marjorie Precept."

Of course nobody prefers disagreeable to agreeable things. I never heard of any one who was delighted to sit in the dentist's chair, did you? I never found it very pleasant to beg pardon for having done wrong, nor charming to go a mile or two out of my way on an errand which was made necessary by my own forgetfulness; nor, I confess, are pills quite as much to my taste as sugar-plums.

But, my dears, your Aunt Marjorie learned a great while ago that sometimes disagreeable things must be done. And the best and wisest way is to do them at once and bravely. If you grasp a nettle firmly, it is much less likely to sting you than if you take hold of it lightly and carelessly. If there is a lesson for to-morrow which you do not like—that "old" arithmetic or those "old" boundaries—do not put off studying it until you have finished your history and peeped into your botany and colored your map, but ing resolutely at the hard lesson first. Get that out of the way, and then with a clear conscience you may attack the others.

Nobody admires a coward. If you happen to know that there is a cowardly drop of blood in a certain boy, how you despise him! Why, I've heard tiny children in the street call a playmate "fraid cat," and point at him with an air of contempt, as though that word left nothing more to be said.

But, Fred, Will, Jenny, what if you are aware that you are, 'way down in your heart, a bit of a coward now and then? You do not like to own it when you make a mistake. There are certain stiff and dignified people who rather frighten you, and when papa sends you with a message to their houses, you hesitate and say "Can not Tom go?" You are sometimes afraid to say "No" when you are urged to do something which is against the home law or the rule of the school. You are the very tiniest bit in the world a coward.

Trust your Aunt Marjorie, dears. This will never do. A girl or boy, to amount to anything, must be brave.

And when a disagreeable thing faces you, face it. You will always find that it was not half so bad nor so dreadful as it seemed in the first place. Half the trouble was in your own fancy.—Harper's Young People.

Idleness in Japan.

The rather singular assertion that "the Japanese have no need of watches" is thus explained by the Choya Shimbun: "In Japan the population is numerous, but labor is scarce. Not only is work scarce, but the people are idle and very few exert themselves in active industry. Some may be inclined to think this an exaggerated statement, though admitting the fact as one of the weakest points of Japanese national habits; but when the state of things prevailing here is compared with that of European countries our assertion will be seen to be the truth. Artisans, for instance, will not execute work within the specified time. When they say they will finish a job before seven o'clock next morning, you need not expect to see them before eight or nine o'clock. It is quite common to have an article ordered to be made within, say, three days, sent to you four or five days subsequently. As workmen neither lose their occupation nor fail to make a living in consequence of their unpunctuality, watches are of no use to them. You always notice large crowds waiting for the departure of trains or ships several hours before the fixed hour without the least regard to the time thus wasted. On the whole, therefore, it is not too much to say that watches are of no practical use to the generality of the Japanese people."

Some time ago a young lady who desired to get off the train at Army Point, near Benicia, said to Conductor Dan West: "Mr. West, please let me off at Army Point." West growled out: "This train always stops at Army Point. How do you know my name is West?" Her answer was: "You have been pointed out to me dozens of times as Dan West, the surliest man on the [illegible]

A SUDDEN CALL.

Death of Vice-President Thomas A. Hendricks.

The Sad Event Causes Universal Sorrow Throughout the Country—The President's Proclamation—Funeral Arrangements—Biographical.

A NATION MOURNS.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 27.—Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice-President of the United States, died very suddenly at his residence in this city at 4:45 o'clock Wednesday evening, under circumstances that were particularly distressing to his family and friends, in so much as they had not anticipated a fatal termination of his brief illness, and nobody was with him when death came. He returned from Chicago last Saturday, and since then had been complaining somewhat of pain in his head and breast, but nothing was thought of it.

Tuesday night Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks attended a reception at the residence of Hon. John J. Cooper, Treasurer of State, returning home in their carriage about midnight. Mr. Hendricks had taken off the heavy clothing which he usually wore and put on a dress suit of lighter material. Before he got home he complained of chilliness and a certain degree of exhaustion, but attributed it to malarial influences. He sat by the fire for an hour or more before retiring, but declined to send for a physician, although urged to do so. He slept restlessly until eight o'clock Wednesday morning, when he arose, dressed himself, and ate quite a hearty breakfast, saying that he felt much better and intended to attend to considerable business during the day. He and Mrs. Hendricks walked out for nearly half an hour, and he had ap...

HOMELESS.

Sad and weary, lonely, old,
Toiling on through winter's cold,
Homeless 'mid the snow and sleet,
Ragged limbs and naked feet,
Helpless, feeble, bent and gray,
There he sweepeth all the day,
None to pity, none to give
Aught that makes it life to live.
Love—the word that makes a home
Far or near, where'er we roam;
Love—that guides us on our way
Through the dusk of sorrow's day;
Love—oh! what a power is this,
Filling darkest hour with bliss;
But he stands, the sweeper old,
Loveless, homeless, pale and cold,
'Mid the city vast and dim,
Not one soul to care for him.
Darkness sinks upon the street,
Snow is falling swift and deep,
Yet he creepeth slowly on,
Faltering sorely, weak and wan.
Now before his dim old eyes,
Instant dreams of beauty rise,
Dreams of moments long, long dead,
Days and hours for ever fled;
Cottage home and dewy lane;
Summer time he sees again;
Children pattering to and fro;
Silvery voices come and go;
Love is there, and Joy, and Home—
Whence no more his feet shall roam.

For a beam of glorious day
Chases all his dreams away;
Angel voices swell the song;
Harps are pealing loud and long;
Gates of Heaven, dazzling, bright;
Glory bursts upon his sight.
Rest at last, no more to roam—
God in love has brought him Home.

JOHN'S CHOICE.

He Preferred to Pick Out His Own Wife.

"Always just so. Raining just as hard as it can pour, Deacon Graves. And this Sunday, too, of all Sundays. It's strange why the world is full of contraries!"

"It's bad, Philury, bad enough. John's first Sunday, too! But may be 'twill clear up before meeting time. 'If it rains before seven 'twill quit be...

... takes away a great deal of the enthusiasm, the glory, as you might please to call it. Have you considered that I may disappoint you, and not come up to the standard?" he said, laughingly—"and you be ashamed of your preacher son, my dear, good, ambitious mother? Perhaps you will have occasion to thank the Lord devoutly that He sent rain upon the thirsty earth this particular morning."

When the first bell began to send forth its music the clouds really seemed to be moving off. If the wind could only be coaxed to shift into the northwest it would be sure to clear. But the obstinate weathercock on top of the barn, with his proud head, would not be induced as much as to look sideways toward the point of compass sure to indicate a clearing up.

When the second bell rang it was raining hard. Mrs. Graves put on her second best dress, and her every-day bonnet, and told the deacon she felt as if she had had cold water poured over her. But the Pillsburys and the Kents, and the city boarders, and even Miss Catlin, came in, one after another, with dripping umbrellas and wet gossamers. Everybody wanted to hear Deacon Graves' son John preach his first sermon in the old meeting-house. The girls, who had known him all his life, had decorated the church with flowers, and the choir had been drilling all the preceding week.

Rev. John Graves seemed perfectly self-possessed in the pulpit, beneath whose droppings he soothingly slept on his mother's arm when a little child, and later heard his name read off among those who were to join on the "profession of their faith." The good old silver haired pastor had introduced the new disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ as "one of our children of the covenant." The sermon was far beyond what the people who had always known John Graves had given him credit for. So often did the loving mother find herself thinking of the temporal glory instead of the spiritual, that she offered up a silent prayer that she might be kept from spiritual pride, and receive this mark of God's kindness to her in a humble manner. But her eyes would stray to the corner of the pew in which Miss Catlin sat. She ...

... around as a candidate long. But that was not what was on John's mind at all. He was pondering how to tell his mother that his wife had already been selected, and that he had had the pleasure of making his own selection. It was not after his mother's pattern, however, as the petite Annie Woodruff was exactly the opposite of Miss Catlin physically, and, he was sure, mentally, as well. He was sorry his choice had not come up to his mother's standard, for her sake. All he knew about it was that Annie just suited him. Whether she would suit his mother and his parishioners was quite another question. But why should ministers have a prescribed type of wives different from other men? A good wife was a good wife anywhere.

"Mother, dear," said John, one morning, when his mother was rolling out the crust of his favorite pies, "I hope I shall find a wife who can make as good pies as you can."

"Miss Catlin will make a splendid housekeeper, and just the wife for you, John, in every particular. She can lead the missionary meetings and the women's prayer-meetings, and cut out anything at the sewing society without any patterns, and she's the most discreet person I ever knew."

"A high recommendation, surely. But what will you think when I tell you that I have already engaged my wife, mother, and that she is just the opposite of Miss Catlin, as far as I can judge?"

"Why, John Graves!" exclaimed the astonished mother, laying down her rolling-pin, which fell upon the floor with a tremendous noise, "when did you have time, with all your theological studies, to hunt up a suitable wife?"

"I didn't spend much time hunting for her; the Lord placed her, in His good providence, in my way. I hope you will love her for my sake, mother."

"I'm sort of overwhelmed John, and you must excuse me if I don't say enough in favor of it just now," and she stooped down and picked up her rolling-pin.

"That rainy Sunday, was a sort of shadow of coming events all around, deacon," she said, as John passed out of the door and the deacon came in. "John's got his wife all picked out and ...

'TWAS EVER THUS.

The winter days are near at hand
When silently through all the land
The snow will fall,
Its dazzling whiteness all around
Will drift above the frozen ground,
Deep over all.

Then the young lover (?) ... will make,
And in a narrow cutter take
His girl to ride,
And she will laugh, blithe and jocose,
Beneath the buffalo snuggled close
Up to his side.

Meanwhile at home his aged father
Er will, to shovel out a path,
The drifts attack;
And while Love holds the youth in thrall
The poor old man at home will almost break his back.

Origin of a Club Name.

"It was curious," remarked Fogg, "how the new Boston club received its name." "Why, how was that?" asked two or three of the boys. "Why, you see," said Fogg, removing his cigar, and then remouthing it for a half-dozen leisurely puffs; "why, you see the members were sitting around the table, each one thinking with all his might for an appropriate name for the club. It was so very quiet that the servant outside thought the gentlemen had all gone home. At all events, he suddenly opened the door, and addressing his fellow-servant within, uttered these remarkable words: 'All gone, Quinn?' It came like an inspiration. It seemed the very name for which all were searching. It was immediately and unanimously voted that the new club should be 'The Algonquin.'"—Boston Transcript.

A Material Difference.

Two Texas gentlemen were talking about traits of character in families.

"It is surprising how members of the same family can be so totally different as is frequently the case."

"To what particular case do you refer?"

"I am thinking of the two sons of Judge Pennybunker."

"As far as I know there is very little difference in their ways and manners. They both seem to be drunk most of the time."

"Yes, that's true, but there is a great difference between them, nevertheless."

"What is it?"

"One of them can never get enough while the other has always got too much."—Texas Siftings.

How It Was Settled.

One of the boarders in a private boarding-house in this city, not over prompt in paying board-bills, grumblingly observed, a morning or two ago, in the hearing of the "boarding missus:" "This coffee isn't settled." "I guess it will be settled before your bill is settled," she quickly retorted. This was a settler he little expected. It set a little ripple of laughter in motion round the table, and, when it settled, the peacemaker of the house observed that there were probably grounds for complaint on both sides, which settled the matter, and harmony resumed her reign.—Boston Courier.

A Good Suggestion.

"You seem to be serious this morning, Colonel," said one Missouri gentleman to another.

"Yes, Major, I am puzzled to know what to do. The merchant with whom I have been dealing has been dunning me every day for the past week. I believe I'll step around and shoot him."

A Stock Exchange Episode.

The sixty-days limitation of contracts originated in one of the famous speculative ventures of Jacob Little soon after the panic of 1857. He had sold large blocks of Erie, seller's option, at six and twelve months. The "happy family" composed of the most eminent members of the board, combined against him. The day of settlement came; Erie shares had been run up to a high figure. At 2 P. M. the brokers prophesied that the Napoleon of finance would meet with his Waterloo. At 1 P. M. he stepped into the Erie office, presented a mass of convertible bonds that he had quietly purchased in England, and demanded the instantaneous exchange of share equivalents for them. The requisition was met. Little returned to his office, fulfilled his contracts, broke the corner, and was Wellington and Napoleon in one. The convertibles were his Blucher and night. To prevent the repetition of such victories the present option limit was adopted by the Exchange.—R. Wheatley, in Harper's Magazine for November.

What the Star Tells.

Proctor considers it a mistake to regard the new star in the Andromeda nebula as supporting the nebular hypothesis of Laplace, as that celebrated guess at world-origins calls only for changes in nebulous matter so slow as to be imperceptible. The real truth taught by the sudden bursting forth of this star is that the Andromeda nebula is not, as many astronomers suppose, a vast galaxy of brilliant suns so distant as not to be resolvable by the most powerful telescopes, but that it is simply a star-cloud forming a part of our own galaxy or universe. And what is true of the Andromeda nebula is probably so of others, so that it may be concluded that none of the nebulæ or star-clouds are external to our own galaxy, and that the other galaxies of which so much has been written do not exist.

Charm of American Women.

The frankness of the American young women, writes Archibald Forbes, has in it, on the threshold, a certain bewilderment and even embarrassment for the British male person, especially if his collars be too stiffly starched. She has no utter an apparent absence of self-consciousness; her mental equipoise is so serenely stable; her good-fellowship, if one may use the term, is so natural, that he cannot see his way easily to the solution of the problem. I assure him to be a gentleman, so that his intuition deters him from a misconception of the phenomena that confront him.

She flirts; she is adept in flirtation, on it is a flirtation "from the teeth outwards," to use Carlyle's phrase, and he is fain to own to himself, like the fox-hunting farmer we tried unsuccessfully to get drunk on the claret, that he seems to "get no forader." But although the citadel of the fort seems to him strangely impregnable, because of the cool, alert, self-possession of the garrison, I have been told by heroic persons who ventured in the escalade that if the beleaguer be him whom fortune favors, it will terminate an honorable siege by a graceful capitulation.

Human nature is human nature all the world over, and there is no greater error than the prevalent one among us that domesticity is not a leading virtue of American married couples. That there is too much of hotel life for American families I concede, and I am fully conscious of the faults and evils of the system, but that it entails any impairment of the higher domestic virtues I have failed to discover. It is not easy to see how a woman is deteriorated as a companion and friend of man—as the participator in his aspirations, his troubles, his studies, his higher life—because her condition releases her from the duty of devising the details of a dinner, from the irritation of dependence on the grocer's pass-book, and the realization that all bakers are liars, and mostly robbers as well.

Billy Emerson, the minstrel, has made a great success in Australia, and will return quite rich.

Drinks for the Voice.

Tea, coffee, and cocoa are large adjuncts [illegible] the most beneficial. It cannot [illegible] be made too strong and those who [illegible] are the best that have been deprived of their use. A cup of thin cocoa, just warm, is more to be recommended between the exertions of singing than any alcoholic beverage. Tea must not be taken too strong nor when it has drawn too long, for tea then becomes acrid, and has a bad influence on the mucous membrane that lines the throat. There is always a dry sensation after having taken a cup of tea that has been allowed to draw too long. A vocalist had better do without sugar in tea and only take milk with it, or, if an exhilarating drink is needed, mix some claret wine with the tea, putting in a slice of lemon and some honey.

Coffee should never be taken too strong and not too often. Two cups a day is all that can be allowed, without sugar is best. Very strong coffee heats and makes the voice husky. In fact, no drink should be taken too hot or too strong; the voice wants an equable, mild temperature, that will keep up constant moisture and flexibility in the vocal organs.

These are of all classes and are now universally taken, but I am sorry to say that the chemical ingredients of the sirups used with them are often very injurious to the voice. Soda water is refreshing when pure, but when mixed with all kinds of aromatic substances actually dries the throat instead of moistening it. Ginger ale, cider, and such manufactured drinks are only serviceable to the vocalist when of the very best manufacture, otherwise they are heating and drying instead of cooling. So few fruit sirups are now made of fruit that it is difficult to know where to find them, and the artificial sirups are really dangerous to the voice.

Water is to be recommended, when pure, but not too much ice-water. In any case, it must be filtered water, and never too cold. A spoonful of pure sirup or honey in a glass of cold water is better than aerated drinks. Water in excess is also injurious to the voice. Milk in excess is also injurious, while a glass of fresh milk in the morning is most helpful to the voice; it not only softens it but nourishes and purifies the blood.

The final resume is, do without all alcoholic drinks, if possible; take only the best, in great moderation; exclude beer if possible; rather moisten the throat with small quantities than drown it with large; avoid too much strength, tea, or sugar in beverages like tea and coffee; also artificial sirups; use water and milk reasonably, and never allow yourself to be very thirsty.—Music and Drama.

KING ALFONSO DEAD.

His Majesty, the King of Spain, Dies at 8:45 O'Clock, Wednesday, of Consumption.

Queen Maria Christina Appointed Regent—Returns Show Election of Eighty-Eight Tories, Eighty-Two Liberals, Five Parnellites.

INTENSE SUFFERING.

MADRID, November 25.—King Alfonso died at 8:45 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The dying agonies of the King lasted almost continually from Monday afternoon until Wednesday morning. Throughout Monday night His Majesty had a succession of spasmodic fits which were the result of fever and debility caused by his long illness and inability to retain or assimilate food. Six eminent physicians from Madrid and two local practitioners of El Pardo were in constant attendance. A general consultation was held Tuesday morning and the physicians decided that their royal patient was in danger of a continuance of the spasms throughout the day and, indeed, until he should be relieved of his sufferings by death. It was this prognostication by the doctors which started the rumor that the King was already dead. The gloomy foreboding of the doctors was literally fulfilled. The King suffered intense agony at short intervals throughout the day and night.

Early yesterday morning the attending physicians saw that the end was very near, and the royal family, the chief officers of State and the Cabinet Ministers were summoned. All responded in person except the Ministers of War and of the Interior, who were unable to reach El Pardo in time. The Papal Nuncio was also present bearing the apostolic benediction of the Pope, which he was just in time to give the dying monarch. The King died at precisely 8:45 o'clock.

Premier Canovas forthwith summoned a meeting of the Cabinet, and it was held almost immediately...

...Cross, late political Secretary to the Indian Office, is defeated; in Portsmouth, Sir Henry Drummond Wolff (Tory), Special Commissioner to Turkey and Egypt, is defeated.

The bottom of the poll was reached at three o'clock Thursday morning. The total number of Liberals elected is eighty-eight; Tories, eighty-two, and Parnellites five. This is a Tory gain of twenty-three and a Liberal gain of five, showing a net Tory gain of eighteen. The excitement over the Tory reaction continues unchecked.

The Tory morning papers are jubilant over the Tory gains that have been made thus far in the general elections. They are beginning to call the Tory victories a tidal wave, and they predict that the reaction in favor of the Tories will exceed that which returned the Liberals to power in 1880.

4 A. M.—The complete returns of the elections thus far held show a net Tory gain of twenty seats.

Both the Liberal candidates in Portsmouth have been elected. The city was represented in the last Parliament by two Tories.

The Daily News (Liberal) attributes the reverses thus far experienced by the Liberals to the votes of Churchmen and Parnellites. It says, however, that there is no need to despair if hereafter there shall be unity and activity among the Whigs and Radicals.

OUR NATIONAL BANKS.

Annual Report of Comptroller of the Currency Cannon Showing the Condition of the National Banks.

WASHINGTON, November 27.—The annual report of H. W. Cannon, Comptroller of the Currency, contains much interesting information. It shows that during the year ending November 1, 1885, 145 banks have been organized with a capital of $16,938,000, and circulating notes have been issued to these new associations amounting to $4,274,810. Since the establishment of the National banking system on February 25, 1863, there have been organized 3,406 National banks. Of these 132 have gone into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of winding up their affairs; some have gone into involuntary liquidation for the purpose of reorganization; sixty-four are in liquidation by expiration of their charter, of which num-...

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"Hissed Off the Stage" the Brooklyn Preacher's Theme.

The Never-Ending Drama of Every-Day Life and the Characters It Develops—Why Some Succeed and Others Miserably Fail.

In a recent sermon delivered by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, he announced as the subject of his discourse "Hissed Off the Stage," taking the following as his text:

Men shall clap their hands at him and shall hiss him out of his place.—Job, xxvii, 23.

This allusion seems to be dramatic. The Bible more than once makes such allusion. Paul says, "We are made a theater (or spectacle) to angels and to men." The theater is so old that no one can fix the date of its birth. Archilochus, Simonides and Solon, who wrote for it dithyrambics, lived about 600 or 700 years before Christ. It is evident from the text that some of the theater-goers were known in Job's time, because in the text he describes an actor hissed off the stage. The impersonator comes on the boards and, either through lack of study of the part he is to take or ineptness or other incapacity, the audience are offended, and express their disapprobation and disgust first by over-applause, attempting by great clapping of hands to drown out what he says; and that failing to stop the performer, they put their tongue against their teeth and make terrific sibilation until he disappears behind the curtain. "Men shall clap their hands at him and shall hiss him out of his place."

My text suggests that each one of us is put on the stage of this world to take some part. McCullough, the actor recently buried, was no more certainly appointed on any occasion to appear as Spartacus, or Edwin Forrest as King Lear, or Charlotte...

...engagements, from the lethargies that seem to hang the foot when they lift it, to the hand when they put it up, to the words when they speak.

Two young men in a store. In the morning the one goes to his post the last minute or one minute behind. The other is ten minutes before the time, and has his hat and coat hung up and is at his post waiting for duty. The one is ever and anon in the afternoon looking at his watch to see if it is not most time to shut up. The other stays half an hour after he might go and, when asked why, says he wanted to look over some entries he had made to be sure he was right, or to put up some goods that had been left out of place. The one is very punctilious about doing work not exactly belonging to him. The other is glad to help the other clerks in their work. The first will be a prolonged nothing and he will be poorer at sixty than at twenty. The other will be a merchant prince.

Indolence is the cause of more failures in all occupations than you have ever suspected. People are too lazy to do what they can do, and want to undertake that which they can not do. In the drama of life they don't want to be a common soldier carrying a halberd across the stage, or a falconer, or a mere attendant, and so lounge about the scenes till they shall be called to be a Macready or a Junius Brutus Booth. They say, "Give me the part of Timon, of Athens, rather than that of Flavius, his steward." "Let me be Cymbeline, the King, rather than Pisanio, the servant." After awhile they, by some accident of prosperity or circumstances, get in the place for which they have no qualification. And very soon, if the man be a merchant, he is going around asking his creditors to compromise for ten cents on the dollar. Or, if a clergyman, he is making tirades against the ingratitude of churches. Or, if an attorney, by unskillful management he loses a case in which widows and orphans are robbed of their portion. Or, if a physician, he by malpractice gives his pa-...

An Old Settler Gone.

Samuel W. Steele, of Eveline Township, died at his home Sunday morning, of apoplexy. Mr. Steele was one of the oldest settlers of Charlevoix county, having lived in Eveline twenty-one years. He was born in New Haven, Conn., in 1826, being at the time of his death nearly 60 years of age. He has been an active professor of religion for over fifty three years.

What They Think of Us.

"The best local paper that I know of." —Judge J. M. Rice.

"A better paper than they have in the city of Muskegon." —H. V. Riffenburg.

The Charlevoix Sentinel is now printed by steam, on a power press, has added largely to its advertising and job type and is evidently receiving a small portion (much yet remains due) for all its good work for northern Michigan, and Charlevoix county in particular.—G. T. Herald.

Another Bank Building.

It seems to be pretty well understood, and indeed quite definitely settled upon, that the Charlevoix Savings Bank will next spring erect a solid brick structure for its use. It will be substantial and elaborate in every particular, and contain a fire and burglar-proof vault, and all the modern bank improvements, as well as private rooms for President, Directors, etc. During the winter plans will be adopted, and a site decided upon. To this end a committee of the Directors has already been appointed. This is an institution closely identified with the business interests of Charlevoix, and we congratulate the stockholders upon the prosperity which this project indicates.

The Future of the Charlevoix Historical Society.

The Charlevoix Historical Society has reached a period in its existence where it may be considered one of the enduring institutions of Charlevoix. Its weekly meetings are more popular as literary and musical entertainments than ever, and, already numbering in its membership the best of our people of both sexes, its roll is being weekly increased by the accession of new names. There is little doubt but that in the near future permanent quarters will be secured, and handsomely fitted up as the Society's parlors. The ladies of the Society are already talking it, and what the ladies of Charlevoix undertake they generally accomplish. Charlevoix is proud of her Historical Society, and she has reason to be.

Hon. Hampton Rich.

A party of over 100 of the prominent citizens of Ionia gathered at the M. E. church of that city on the evening of Dec. 1, and then, under the lead of the pastor, Rev. Masters, and Presiding Elder Moore, made a charge on the residence of Hon. Hampton Rich, in honor of his 70th birthday anniversary. Mr. Rich is still well preserved and strong, both physically and mentally, and shows but slight trace of the ravages which so many years of business makes on most men. Several short speeches and recitations, followed by the presentation of a valuable gold watch and an easy chair, made up the evenings exercises. Mr. Rich has spent nearly fifty years in Ionia, and been one of her most trusted and honored citizens. He is the father of Mrs. J. L. Hurd, of this place, and, with his estimable wife, spends his summers here.

Michigan Whitefish Disappearing.

"I believe I know as much about the Michigan coast as anybody," said Lyman A. Brant, representative in the Legislature and inspector of fisheries, to a Detroit reporter recently. "I will start out Monday for a tour along the Lake Erie coast, and when that is finished I will have made the circuit. I have discovered that whitefish are becoming scarcer every year. This is because they are fished for most extensively during their spawning season, and because the meshes of nets are too small. Laws will have to be made to prevent fishing in the spawning season, and to make the mesh larger, unless we want to lose all our whitefish." This statement is especially true of the upper fishing grounds of Lakes Michigan and Huron. The recklessness with which whitefish are caught furnishes reasonable cause for alarm, and the legislature of Michigan should promptly regulate the business. It would be better for all concerned in the long run.

Marine.

The scow Lottie Mason is stripped and laid up.

The tug Martin is storm bound at Harbor Springs.

The steamers Clara Belle and Nellie Booth are hauled out at Washburn's ship yard.

Three hundred feet of the Sand Beach harbor of refuge was washed out by the recent gale.

The steamer C[illegible] hauled up, and will occupy the ways at Washburn's ship yard this winter.

The schooner Sea Gem, on her way to Milwaukee, sought shelter in Frankfort harbor Saturday.

The schooner Fleetwing, overdue here from Milwaukee, has grain for the Rifenburg & Co. flouring mill.

The tug Payne had a big hole stove in her by the ice up South Arm yesterday, but got out of the scrape all right.

Sunday during the blow the steamer Nellie Booth partially on the ways at the ship yard, slipped off and filled, and now lies with only her bow out of water.

The steam barge Graves, which went ashore on South Manitou three or four weeks ago, has, as was expected, become a total wreck. She was heavily insured.

The schooner Mocking Bird reached Milwaukee Friday evening on her way to Chicago, but disposed of her cargo there and cleared for her home port Monday evening.

The schooner Florence M. Smith is stripped and laid up. The Florence has earned her owner big money the two seasons she has been out, and it is pretty generally understood that she don't owe Capt. Bob a cent.

The schooner Eagle Wing, lumber laden for Chicago, the schooner Melvine, pig iron for same port, and the scow Dan Mabee, wood to Milwaukee, are all in the harbor storm bound, and their skippers dividing their time between watching the barometer and playing pedro.

The steam barge Kingsford, which left here Tuesday noon of last week with a cargo of wood and its consignor, E. M. Clark, on board, reached south Manitou harbor Wednesday night, and lay there during the big end of the recent gale, reaching Milwaukee Saturday night after a rough passage.

School Exhibition.

Preparations are being made for a public entertainment to be given by the various departments of the public schools, on Wednesday evening of next week. The proceeds will be applied toward the purchase of an organ for the schools, should the receipts be sufficiently liberal. It is to be hoped that the enterprise will meet with a hearty support. A fine programme is being prepared. Look out for bills later.

Antrim County News.

From the Breeze:

Mrs. William Kanagy, of Charlevoix, is canvassing in Banks for Cram's Atlas of the World.

William Paukett leaves Banks this week for southern Ohio where he will leave his family, while he takes a trip to Florida.

The Catholics of Banks and vicinity have purchased from Mrs. Wm. Kanagy two acres of ground on the state road, one half mile north of Flanigan's store, on which they expect to build a church in the spring.

John W. Moore of Banks, had a sale last Saturday, and will start for Ohio and Florida in a few weeks. He will leave his family in Ohio while he searches for the "fountain of youth," or something else, in the sunny south.

The Mancelona furnace will go into blast the last of December for a 60 days' run.

B. P. Wilkinson has organized a singing class at Atwood.

Ironton.

Lots of prosperity floating through the air seemingly, but none of it has struck us yet.

Elder Van Auken filled his appointment here on Sunday, facing the fierce storm from and to Charlevoix. His congregation heartily appreciate such faithful service and the few present at the services heartily enjoyed the exercises held under such adverse circumstances. Elder Iddings appointment being at night and the storm growing worse he did not come.

Elder Putman left us on Saturday for good. This charge is now vacant.

We would like to know how "old Boreas" is serving our brother in Hayes now.

Prof Howe shows us an interesting program to be given by his school in the near future at an exhibition.

Samuel W. Steele one of our oldest and most respected citizens, living on a farm two and a half miles north of here, died on Sunday morning at six o'clock. He lived with his two sons who went away on Friday to work, returning on Saturday evening, when they found their father lying on the bed speechless. The fire was out and kindlings were ready prepared for building the fire. It is supposed he lay down on Friday night and had been taken after that. The clothing was somewhat disturbed, as if there might have been a struggle. He did not recover his speech, and died as has been stated at six o'clock Sunday morning.

LATER. We have since been informed that the boys left home on Thursday afternoon instead of Friday.

Mr. Ardin Sheldon is just recovering from a shock of numb palsy so that he is out among his friends again.

OUR IMPROVEMENTS.

Annual Summary of Charlevoix Improvements For 1885.

Last season at this time we gave a careful statement showing the various improvements about town, the aggregate footing up $64,720. This season's record as will be noticed below is far in excess of that, with improvements contemplated for next year that will far exceed either.

Congregational Church.

Rev. C. F. Van Auken left Monday for Gaylord to attend the Cheboygan District Congregational Conference, and will be absent until Friday.

On Thursday Rev. C. F. VanAuken, will attend the ordination services of Rev. C. F. Tuttle, at Vanderbilt and preach the sermon of the occasion.

The Cong. Sunday school received their new singing books last Saturday.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken will occupy his pulpit Sunday morning and evening.

M. E. Church Notes.

Rev. Mr. Putman, the M. E. pastor at Ironton, has resigned his charge, and gone to his former home in the State of New York. Rev. J. T. Iddings will supply the charge.

First quarterly meeting service at the Charlevoix M. E. church next Sabbath. Preaching Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock; subject, "The vicarious sufferings of the Savior." Followed by the sacrement of the Lord's Supper. Sabbath school at twelve o'clock.

Young people's meeting at 6 o'clock; at 7 o'clock discourse by the pastor; subject, "Phases of the intemperance question." All are invited.

Hazings from Hayes.

Our Town Board has a law-suit on its hands in reference to school affairs.

Henry Flickinger has rented his farm to James Watt, and returned to Elkhart.

Some of our Hayesites are afflicted with big heads and some with big feet; but Gynx is a sort of medium between both.

S. W. Soiter has completed his new barn and contemplates the erection of a house and store in the spring.

We should have said in our last items that Cram & Whitford are buying maple and birch logs, instead of elm.

A delegation of Hayesites, including A. E. Newman, Henry Hare, H. V. Chew and W. H. Kunkle, started for the lumber woods Monday.

Norwood Notes.

Mrs. Van Pelt has gone to Chicago.

George B. Guyles ditto.

Peter Vanornum a girl.

The open winter prophets are beginning to hedge.

The Ladies' Aid Society gave a supper at the hall on last Wednesday evening, after which Miss Rose Cody entertained those present by select readings for an hour or more.

On Sunday E. R. Harris house caught fire around the chimney, which was discovered just in time. Had the building burned nothing could have saved the Town Hall, and Frank Richardson's house and barn, as the wind was blowing a gale from the west.

Quarter Off Sale.

Wishing to close out my entire stock, I will sell all goods at one quarter off the regular price until January 1st.

MISS L. SPAULDING.

Seasonable Suggestions for the Holidays. What to Buy.

Everyone is interested in Christmas; at any rate everyone that anticipates receiving or bestowing a gift and the question, what is most appropriate? is a wide one.

For several years the fashion of buying only useful, sensible gifts has been gaining, and is especially commendable with people of moderate means. But the multitude of such articles often makes a choice somewhat difficult. This, however, is greatly simplified upon determining the amount to be expended. If one wishes to bestow a slight token of regard a handsomely embroidered silk or linen handkerchief or towel might be thought of; or a pair of gloves or mits would be useful. Woolen hosiery and leggings are comfortable this sort of weather.

For something a little more expensive what more sensible than a pair of good wool blankets or lap robe, or a shawl or stylish cloak? A nice hanging or study lamp is a luxury these long winter evenings. Decorated tea or toilet sets are always good.

In the holiday season the best assortments of the year are to be found, and most merchants expect now to reap the cream of their profits, but we understand that J. L. Hurd & Co. have announced a genuine benefit sale to commence Saturday, December 12th., and continue until holidays, when they will offer their entire stock at an immense sacrifice. Nothing reserved. Our readers are assured that they can save 25 to 50 per cent by attending this sale.

The 49th congress which met Monday stands as follows: Senate—Republicans, 42; Democrats, 34; House, Democrats, 18[illegible]; Republicans, 140; Greenback democrat, 1; Greenback republican, 1.

Lapeer Clarion: The democratic party has never been accused of doing much for the soldiers.

Local News.

—Attend the school exhibition at Opera Hall to-night.

—Stockman & Iddings have a new holiday advertisement. Look it over.

—Covered stages are running between Charlevoix and Petoskey, and Charlevoix and East Jordan.

—M. J. Stockman left for Mt. Clemens, and C. Y. Cook and wife for a southern Michigan trip, Thursday.

—Burns & Scroggie will run a covered heated stage daily between Charlevoix and East Jordan this winter.

—Tip Miller returned from the Beavers on the tug Martin Thursday, and has gone into winter quarters with his Charlevoix friends.

—Mr. Bradbeer, the photographer, requests all who have pictures at his gallery, or all those owing him, to call soon, as he goes to Big Rapids next week.

—Since the middle of last week the sleighing has been superb, and the snow so deep that the pedestrians have been compelled to take to the roads.

—Ol Cooper is clerking at Fox & Miller's.

—Mrs. J. L. Hurd returned from Ionia, Saturday.

—Ice has formed over Clam Lake, and navigation closed.

—Mr. Supervisor Harris will without delay crawl back into his shell.

—John McCabe's meat market is represented in our advertising columns this week.

—J. T. Kirkpatrick has bought a fine Krakauer upright piano for his daughter Aggie.

—Ed. F. Parmelee and wife leave tomorrow for a holiday visit in Hillsdale and Reading.

—H. B. Wier, of the Charlevoix Summer Resort, is spending the winter at Tarpon Springs, Florida.

—Hanbury, the drayman, and Burns & Scroggie, the liverymen, have new advertisements on our 8th page.

—The Petoskey Record advertises an account of $5.60 against John Wagley of Cross Village, for sale at 15 cents.

—Mrs. Mckeel has returned to her home in Chicago feeling much better from the skillful treatment received from Dr. Lewis.

—Tom Chamberlin came over from Petoskey last week to tell us that our report that he was to emigrate to California was authentic.

—L. D. Bartholomew and family, E. Carpenter, wife and daughter and M. J. Stockman and wife, leave for Florida two weeks from to-morrow.

—Frank Crains came over from Cadillac Saturday, returning yesterday. He delivered 36 copies of Gen Grant's memoirs to Charlevoix parties.

—A finely arranged and interesting programme will be presented by the pupils of the school at opera hall to night. Admission, 20 cents; pupils, 10 cents.

—Mrs Litney has a holiday millinery ad in this issue. Since moving into her new quarters Mrs. Litney's trade is constantly increasing. Call and see her fine stock of ladies goods.

—Dave Bradbeer leaves for Big Rapids next Wednesday. He will return to Charlevoix early next spring. Dave has a good many friends here who will miss his genial countenance this winter.

—Dwight R. Bennett, formerly of Norwood, is at Newton, Kas., employed for the winter in the First National Bank of that place. He has been prospecting west of there, and will undoubtedly go into business for himself in some western town in the spring.

—We have a sprig of genuine "mistletoe bough" from Florida, hanging over our front door, and the first handsome young lady passing under it on Christmas day will get kissed if we are in that vicinity, and we shall endeavor to be. Now don't all come at once, nor too early.

—The meanest and the smallest man in any community is he who thinks the local paper unworthy of either advertising or subscription patronage, and yet who wants to see what it has to say, free of charge; that is where you get your simon pure, unadulterated—dead head.—Shiawassee Union.

—The Boyne City Statesman says last week:

There will be a shooting match at the farm of John Sodman, Deer Lake on Saturday, the 19th inst. Geese and chickens will be the prizes.

"Geese is a pretty large word for the Statesman force—too large, in fact; which accounts for the erroneous spelling. But then, you can't blame a "geese" for what he don't know.

—Canadian parties are scouring Northern Michigan buying rock elm and paying therefor $1.25 to $1.50 for each tree as it stands. Nearly 300 Canadian French are employed cutting trees and hewing them into square timber. When properly prepared they are shipped to Scotland and used in ship building. Over 5,000,000 feet of rock elm was shipped last season from Northern Michigan.

—A newspaper is the indicator of the enterprise of a town. Persons looking up locations often send for sample copies of the local papers, and form a pretty correct opinion of the town from their columns. Now and then we hear a complaint that certain local papers devote too much space to advertisements. Well, there is a limit that should not be exceeded. But there never appeared an unobjectionable advertisement in any paper that did not prove of benefit to hundreds of persons, and if a paper is found nowadays printed without a fair proportion of enterprising advertisements, beware of the town; it will be unprofitable to settle in it or near it.—Ex.

—Remember the school exhibition at the Opera house this evening.

—Will Horton and Elmer Mayne are sweeping chimneys in Indiana.

—The Charlevoix Manufacturing Co. shut down for the winter last week.

—G. V. Rifenburg left for Muskegon Monday. He is expected home tomorrow.

—C. J. Strang, has purchased the Charles Kelley house on Grant st., for $500.

—Pat O'Neill wires from Northport that he took 2,500 pounds of whitefish from his nets Friday.

—A. J. McLeod has a new advertisement on our fifth page. Mac is doing a thriving business at his old stand.

—Mrs. M. P. Burns left last Thursday for Terra Haute, Ind., to spend the winter with her daughter, Mrs. McBeth.

—Wm. Gul & Son, of Northport, will do a big business this winter at Gill's pier, in wood, bark, logs, posts and ties.

—R. J. Cooper, successor to Cooper Bros., has a new advertisement this issue calling attention to his fine line of groceries and confectionery.

—Will McLennon, who has been attending college at Evanston, now supplies a charge in an Indiana town, going down from Evanston each Saturday. Will has a good many friends here who would like to see him behind one of the Charlevoix pulpits, some day.

—Dr. Lewis held an autopsy on the body of Chester Blanchard's child, which died last week. It was thought that death was caused by swallowing a tin "spear head" from a plug of tobacco, but the examination showed that two of its intestines had become "telescoped."

—And again we crow! Last week Monday morning when the mercury was lingering at 10° below zero at Kalamazoo and other southern Michigan cities, it only registered 18° above at Charlevoix. Will Bro. Townsend of the Telegraph please paste this in his hat for reference.

—The mill plant and 1,200 acres of hardwood land in Paradise, Grand Traverse county, have been sold by the Hadley Brothers Manufacturing Company, to Hannah, Lay & Co. S. C. Curdy has been retained as manager, and will cut the timber out as fast as the mill capacity will allow.

—The SENTINEL will always promptly herald any positive tidings of good cheer for the Bay [illegible], and it will [illegible] promptly puncture anything that has humbug in it. Wind will not build railroads, and we had rather remain nearer the earth than be elevated heavenward and then collapse.

—Elk Rapids Progress: The clipping from the Charlevoix Journal last week had the most genuine railroad ring in it of any railroad news we have read in our exchanges in the past ten years. If our hopes in regard to a railroad are to be cut down and blasted again, our office and good will are for sale. We cannot stand these blasted hopes much longer.

—Next year in Petoskey, Watson Snyder will put up a double brick block on Lake street, Mrs. Dr. Williams will erect a single block on Howard street, Curtiss, Wachtel & Co., will build a banking office and two stores, J. J. Warne is down for a brick block and J. A. Hankey is billed to erect another brick building while the Arlington, Cushman and Clifton houses will be enlarged and the Petoskey mechanics will play to full houses.

—The COURIER has had the pleasure of a call from Dr. D. Chamberlin, of Charlevoix, Mich., who is visiting his friend and former pupil, Dr. George Emerson. Dr. Chamberlin is a learned and successful physician from old Rutland county, Vermont, the editor's native county, where they were boys together and the exchange of reminiscences of old times was a delight to them if not to others present.—Winfield [Kas.] Daily Courier.

Common Council.

At the Council meeting Thursday evening the Treasurer's report showed a balance in the Treasury of $567.

The matter of a night watchman was laid over.

The Fire Warden was instructed to visit every house and inspect stove pipes and flues.

The Marshal was instructed to prevent the emptying of ashes on Bridge street.

The Chief Engineer was instructed to keep sufficient places open on Round Lake for water supply in case of fire.

J. G. Stevenson was employed as janitor for the public building.

A special committee was appointed to establish a dock line on Round Lake.

Circuit Court.

The trial of Barry for the Indian murder began at East Jordan this morning, with the following jury: Elisha Shepard, Joseph Cook, Charles Todd, Henry Dickerson, John Newville, Albert Towsley, Wm. Claspill, Jasper Cater, Joseph McConnell, George Howe, David H. Gillett, Wm. Adams.

The case of Tom Trimble was put over to next term owing to the disappearance of the principal witness.

Carpenter, Bartholomew & Company.

In age, stability and enterprise in a mercantile house, count, Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co. should rate with the best. Instituted in the early history of Charlevoix, and acting upon the true "civil service reform" principle of promoting its tried and trusted subordinates, they have built up an establishment that takes rank among the leading mercantile houses of Northern Michigan. With a broad reputation for integrity and a financial condition which always keeps them to the front in supplying the public with every necessity in general merchandise, they are earning their just reward in a business prosperity well known, and annually on the increase. See their new advertisement.

M. E. Church Notes.

Prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7 o'clock.

Sermon next Sabbath morning. Subject: "The bright in each cloud."—Job, 36—21.

The young people's meeting at 6 o'clock.

Sermon at 7 p. m. Subject—"Salvation free to the willing." On Christmas Eve the Sabbath school will have a banquet, with exercises by the school, in the place of the usual Christmas tree. A good time is in expectation.

ELK RAPIDS
MACHINE
--AND-- BOILER
WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist: and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

ATTAR OF ROSES.

An Account of the Manufacture of This Costly Substance.

The following account of the manufacture of this interesting substance is condensed from a paper in the United States consular reports. The annual product in the district referred to reached three tons in 1883-4, selling for $400,000. In 1883-4 the product was 1,600 pounds, but the cost of manufacture has been greatly increased in recent years and it sold for $425,000.

Attar of roses is produced on a large scale in the province of Roumelia, on the southern slopes of the Balkans, and it is only the attar of those districts that is of any moment. Small quantities are produced in India and Persia, but they are used for home consumption, and the same is the case with the attar of roses produced in the south of France, which, although of good quality, forms only a very small part of the consumption, of these producing places. The attar of Tunis is of the best quality, but the quantity produced is comparatively small and the price high. Very little is exported.

The attar produced in Roumelia is made by distillation from rosa damascena, whose color is, as a rule, bright red; it is sometimes, but rarely, white. It is not very full as a flower, and blooms in May and June. The rose trees, when full grown, reach a height of about six feet, and are planted in rows. They have to be tended very careful from the autumn to the time of gathering. The flowers when in bloom are plucked before sunrise, only in such quantities as can be distilled on the day they are plucked. The distilling apparatus consists of a plain tinned still, from which a long curved tube is directed through a tub filled with fresh water, and empties in a big bottle. Several such apparatus are usually standing on stone hearths, by the side of each other, and, if possible, close to a brook in the shade of trees.

According to the size of the apparatus, the still may hold from twenty-five to fifty pounds of roses, on which about double that amount of water is poured, and is boiled briskly for about half an hour. The distilled liquid is collected in the bottle that stands at the mouth of the cooling tube, and the attar of roses, which separates from the water appears on the surface, where it is skimmed. The distilled water is again used for distillation, and constitutes ultimately the rose-water which enters into trade.

After a sufficient quantity of attar is produced it has to be totally freed from the water, and is kept in copper cans, tinned both on the inside and outside.

The rose trees attain their maximum producing capacity in their fourth year, say from 2,500 to 4,000 pounds per acre. They are very sensible to cold; fogs and rain are also very fatal to the blossoms. But the yield depends most upon the weather during time of distillation; the latter lasts sometimes ten days only, when the weather is warm and clear, whereas it may require a month and more if the sky is cloudy, especially if rain falls at intervals. In the first case the yield is almost always unfavorable, as the roses are blooming at the same time, and, as there is no time to gather and work them all, the odor of the flower soon vanishes, and the yield in attar is much less in consequence, so that 5,000 to 7,000 pounds of leaves are needed to give one pound of attar. When the weather is favorable and the buds bloom gradually 2,500 to 3,600 pound of leaves will give one pound.

Pure attar of roses when distilled with due care is at first colorless, but soon takes a yellowish color. No certain method is known to detect falsification. Admixtures of alcohol for the purpose of increasing the freezing capacity, or admixtures of spermaceti, neither of which, at least in the wholesale trade, is now resorted to, are, of course, easily detected. But the most important falsifying medium is oil of geranium, which some dealers order even at Constantinople to be sent to Kyzanlik, to be distilled over again with rose leaves, and to mix with attar of roses. Moderate additions of this oil defy detection. The surest method of testing is by smell, but it requires much training, and can only be acquired by many years' patience. It is still a widespread belief, although an erroneous one, that the quality of the attar of roses corresponds exactly with the degree of its freezing capacity. "The stearopten," which is the freezing agent of the attar, is devoid of any smell whatever, and has, therefore, no bearing on the flavor or the purity of the attar. A certain freezing capacity is, it is true, one of the claims which one may lay on really good attar, but this only because the admixture of other essential oils has the effect of lowering the freezing point. The attar sets at 52 degrees to 68 degrees Fahrenheit, according to the quantity of stearopten contained in it; it sometimes, but exceptionally, congeals at a higher temperature, it then shows feathery, transparent crystals, filling all the liquid; specific weight is 9.87 at 67 degrees Fahrenheit.

Attar made in the highest-situated villages is, as a rule, considered of greater freezing capability, and of more intense, but harsher, flavor, whereas the produce from the plain shows a lower freezing point, and is possessed of a sweeter and finer flavor.—Scottish Agricultural Gazette.

The number of stars visible to the naked eye is commonly greatly overestimated. Let one begin to count the stars and the false impression is soon dispelled. The whole number of the stars down to those of the fifth magnitude inclusive, is hardly more than 1,500. Stars of the sixth magnitude are the tiniest specks of light, visible only in a favorable state of the atmosphere, and these included will not bring the count much above 4,000, except for persons who have extraordinary keenness of sight.

A curious instance of how considerations of personal comfort are made secondary to the desire to save time by the American public is shown in a certain restaurant, where, in one room, tables and seats are provided, and in the other a long lunch counter, with stools attached as seats. Most of the patrons prefer crowding each other on these stools to eating their meals in comfort in the adjoining room, because at the lunch counter, being nearer the attendants, they can bolt their food a few seconds quicker.

A rich Georgia land-owner sent for a neighbor and proposed that if he would support him while alive, furnish him medical attendance, and bury him decently, he would make him a deed to his land. The trade was closed, the papers drawn, and a doctor at once sent for. The result was that the fortunate neighbor of the rich man was in possession of his estate within a week. Doctors are indispensable in some emergencies.—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

His Confidence Was Shaken.

In that doorway of a Madison street cigar store a brindle little pug dog sits all day on his haunches. He is chained to the cigar store [illegible] not because the proprietor fears he may escape, but because [illegible] the habits and pastimes of the gamins who frequent the neighborhood. Last evening a pleasant-looking young man entered the store and purchased a package of cigarettes. He looked tired and his eyes were filled with a very vacant stare. It was evident to the most casual observer that the young man had been drinking. He carefully picked the tinfoil off the package of cigarettes and tried for some time to pick out one of them. Finally he tore one side of the package and tucked all but one of the lung-destroyers into his coat-tail pocket. This one he lit, and as he was lighting it he caught sight of the dog's chain. With uncertain gaze he followed it along until it reached the dog. Then he rubbed his eyes, looked again, and appeared pretty sure that there was a dog in the doorway. Still, he was not convinced. He glanced around cautiously, saw that no one was looking, and then he whistled softly. The dog did not respond and the young man turned pale. He whistled louder, still no response. Then he reached out his cane and cautiously poked the dog. His poke gave back a hollow metallic sound and his hat began to rise. He dropped his fresh cigarette, rushed out into the street, boarded an Ogden avenue car and said, "Shay, conduct'r, lemme off 't Washin'ton Home. I've got 'em again."—Chicago Herald.

An interesting estimate of the amount, in weight, of one inch of rainfall on one acre of ground is thus given: An acre of ground contains 6,272,640 inches square. Rain one inch deep would give that many square inches; 1,728 cubic inches make one cubic foot. Rain one inch deep would give 3,630 cubic feet. A cubic foot of water weighs 62½ pounds, 2,000 make a ton. This will give 226,875 pounds, or 113 tons and 875 pounds to the acre, of rain one inch deep.

The Scientific American approves of the proposal to establish a chain of light-ships across the Atlantic. It considers the general idea good, and, as to its practicability, it states that the experience with light-ships proves that a vessel properly constructed may be made to ride out the heaviest storms at anchor, save upon rare occasions, and that the light steel cables of recent construction have been successfully used to anchor ships in the deepest water "off soundings."

Cocaine, the remarkable medicament which anaesthetizes mucous membranes and has simplified many minor operations on the eye, is very costly. Hence it is not surprising to hear that, in Paris at all events, the manufacturers endeavor to obtain as much of the alkaloid as possible by submitting the cocoa leaves to a second process of exhaustion. The result is very similar to that which follows attempts to make a second infusion out of already exhausted tea leaves.

Miss Cleveland is the baby of the Cleveland family. She looks to be 35. She is a medium-sized woman, inclined to be petite, with square shoulders, a short neck, and a face sallow in its complexion, but decidedly intellectual in its features. From a high forehead little brown curls stand upward, and going backward cover her whole head with honeycomb ringlets.

The heirs of Jeremiah Millbank who purchased the mansion and pleasure grounds of William M. Tweed, at Greenwich, Conn., have taken down the fine house and will rebuild it on the edge of the hill, familiarly known as "Put's Hill," down which Gen. Putnam made his famous leap in escaping from the "redcoats." The new house will cost $1,000,000.

HENRY BARTH, Prop.
Charlevoix, Mich.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

Established 1869.

CHARLEVOIX, DEC. 16, 1885.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor.

He Has the "Bulge."

If any of our readers ever had any doubt of the accuracy of the SENTINEL'S judgment of the mental capacity of our esteemed neighbor of the Charlevoix Journal, we point to the following as a clincher:

A careful reading of the letter of Supervisor Harris in the last Sentinel confirms all that the JOURNAL said concerning the corrupt acts of the Board, and indirectly admits more than the JOURNAL intimated, inasmuch as we are supported, notwithstanding the ravings of the editor of that sheet.

Supervisor Harris is the oldest and most experienced member of the Board. He has a well-earned reputation for honesty and candor. In his recent letter he emphatically denied every charge made by the Journal, and, if his word is good, he successfully refuted every one of them, in every particular. If any member of the Board could clear himself and colleagues from the charge of corruption, Mr. Harris was that man, and he did it.

But we give it up. If there is no force in incontrovertible evidence, there is no use in producing it.

The Board of Supervisors will therefore take notice that "the fiat has gone forth" from the Journal office that they are a body of corruptionists, in whose hands the affairs of the people are not safe.

This matter may be considered settled at once and forever.

CHARLEVOIX HARBOR.

Annual Report of D. W. Lockwood, Captain of Engineers.

The condition of Charlevoix harbor at the close of the fiscal year was as follows:

Depth of water.—There was a depth of ... feet from Lake Michigan to Pine Lake, through the intermediate channels. The ... piers and revetments are about the same as last year at this time.

During the past season the following work has been done: A section of the plank beam revetment, covering 161 feet at inner end of lower channel, south side, near Round Lake, was repaired, new piles being driven to replace those that had been torn out by collision, and new cap-timbers put on where needed. A rock elm wale piece was also added to the old work. At the shore end of south pier the plank beam revetment, for a distance of 75 feet, was changed to close piling, secured by a timber superstructure and waling to the old work. The channel face of the inner crib of this pier was built up to a height of 5 feet.

Brush to the amount of 210 cords and 27.4 cords of stone were used in backing the plank-beam revetment where most needed. The work above mentioned was done in the fall of 1884.

Work so far this year (1885) has been confined to the upper channel, where a pile revetment has been built on both sides of the channel, commencing at Round Lake, and extending towards Pine Lake to the upper limit of the high banks. This revetment is 10 feet wide over all, and its length is as follows: North bank, 339 feet; south bank, 3.. feet. The width of channel is 82½ feet, which is as much as could be secured without extensive dredging. The effect of revetting the upper channel will be to prevent the tendency to shoaling in Round Lake at its eastern end, which has resulted from the cutting away of material in the high banks at the lower end of the channel. All the work on this harbor during the fiscal year has been done under contract ...

THAT CHARLEVOIX RAILROAD.

The Story Composed of Wind. An Authoritative Statement from the Company.

It has always been the policy of the SENTINEL to give its readers reliable news, and ... of importance. It has always aimed more at verity than sensation. Hence, when the Journal's positive information was given recently on the subject of a railroad to Charlevoix and Boyne City we questioned the truth of the report, and as a consequence called upon our devoted heads much abuse and scorn. Wishing to give our readers the truth concerning this matter, we addressed an inquiry to President Hughart, enclosing a clipping of the Journal's article, and in reply we have the following:

GRAND RAPIDS & INDIANA R. R. COMPANY,
... AND LAND ...
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., DEC. 9, 1885.

SMITH & PARMELEE,
Charlevoix, Mich.

DEAR SIRS:—Replying to your letter of the 7th inst. in regard to the "proposed" line to Charlevoix ... in the rumor.

Yours Truly,
W. O. HUGHART,
Pres't & Gen'l M'g'r.

"The fiat has gone forth" that the SENTINEL will not boom Charlevoix on wind. It is better to have verity than falsehood as a foundation. We sincerely wish the report might have been true; and we just as sincerely desire that it may yet come true; but it is better for all concerned that we should promulgate only the bare truth. We have always had enough of that without resorting to false ... wind.

Therefore we are of the opinion that "the fiat has gone forth" that the Journal is the wrong paper in which to find facts.

It comes with bad grace for a Democratic paper to talk about the dangers of President Cleveland's assassination, and the "return of Republican misrule." ...

... United States should have an army of at least 50,000 men and it might be made larger than that to advantage. It is now miserably small as compared with that of any other nation on earth. It should be large enough to be ready to meet serious emergencies which are liable to happen at any time. It is scarcely sufficient now for the fair preservation of peace against internal commotion in all parts of the country, to say nothing of the wisdom of the maxim "In time of peace prepare for war." To be well prepared may often avert war, and would most certainly be found a good measure of economy if war should happen.

Call at O. S. Washburn's house for boots, shoes, etc. Selling below cost.

Marine.

... She had a fine run ...

The tug Hall of Frankfort, arrived here Friday morning after the scow Dan Mabee. She laid here until Sunday morning, and took her tow out, taking also the schooners Eaglewing and Melvina. She was to take the Mabee to Frankfort and there turn her over to the steam barge Burnham for Milwaukee. The other two vessels were to sail from the Manitous. Monday morning the Hall had not arrived at Frankfort, and it is presumed they all got under the Manitous during the high wind of Sunday night. The Mabee had wood, the Eaglewing lumber, and the Melvina pig iron. They had been wind-bound here two weeks. Later.—The tug Hall arrived at Frankfort Monday noon. She let go of all three vessels above the Manitous and they headed up the lake with a fair wind.

President Cleveland's First Annual Message to Congress.

Suspension of Compulsory Silver Coinage Favored—The Evils of Polygamy Severely Denounced—The Chinese and Indian Questions.

THE MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—The President's message submitted to Congress to-day is substantially as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE VICE PRESIDENT.

Your assembling is clouded by a sense of public bereavement caused by the recent and sudden death of Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice President of the United States. His distinguished public services, his complete integrity and devotion to every duty and his personal virtues will find honorable record in his country's history. Ample and repeated proofs of the esteem and confidence in which he was held by his fellow-countrymen were manifested by his election to offices of the most important trust and highest dignity, and at length, full of years and honors, he has been laid at rest amid general sorrow and benediction.

The Constitution which requires those chosen to legislate for the people to annually meet in the discharge of their solemn trust also requires the President to give to Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient. At the threshold of a compliance with these constitutional directions it is well for us to bear in mind that our usefulness to the people's interests will be promoted by a constant appreciation of the scope and character of our respective duties as they relate to Federal legislation. ...

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"Crises in Life" the Subject of An Eloquent Discourse.

Delivered at the First Congregational Church of Columbus, Ohio—The Young Man of the Present, Like Absalom of Old, Not Safe.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage visited Columbus, O., recently and delivered a sermon in the First Congregational Church of that city before an audience that completely filled every available portion of the edifice, and many hundreds were unable to gain admittance. The subject of the discourse was "Crises in Life," Mr. Talmage taking for his text:

Is the young man Absalom safe?—II. Samuel, xviii., 32.

Dr. Talmage said two great characteristics of Absalom were worldly ambition and splendid hair. By the one he was defaced, by the other hung. He was a bad boy and broke his father's heart. He wanted to get his father's throne before the decease of the father. He wanted to get it immediately. He got an army. He started out in a great insurrection. David, the father, sits at the palace waiting for the news of the battle to come, not so anxious about whether Absalom's hosts won the day, or whether his own hosts won the day, as he is anxious about the safety of his boy. The father in him mightier than the King.

While he sits there waiting for the coming of the messenger from the battlefield, he sees the dust rising in the highway, and long before the messenger comes up, bringing the swift dispatch, David cries out to him: "Is Absalom alive? Is Absalom dead? Is the boy wounded? Tell me quickly: is the young man Absalom safe?" But as the messenger had no very decisive intelligence to give he stood aside. There David sat waiting for another messenger, and after a while he saw the dust rising on the highway, and long before the messenger had come up, David shouted to him again—shouts to this one as he had to the others: "Have you heard anything from my boy? Is he wounded? Is he alive? Is he dead? Is the young man Absalom safe?" ...

If it had not been for that help that you had, what would have been the result when you told her of your financial embarrassment and misfortune? She was cheerful, she was sympathetic, she was helpful, she helped you all through those dark days of trial, and after the piano went, she could sing without the accompaniment just as well as ever she sang with the accompaniment. There have been Christian women who have so had their domestic troubles sanctified that they could get more music out of a Wheeler & Wilson sewing-machine than they ever in the days of their prosperity they got out of a Chickering Grand or a Steinway.

A Christian minister in England called upon a home of great destitution. There were the husband, the wife, and there were the children. No comfort in the household. Everything indicative of want and struggle. The minister of the gospel said to this young man: "Your mistake was in marrying so early. Do you not think that was the mistake of your life?" The man had been told that that had been the mistake of his life before. The minister said: "It would have been a great deal better for you to have gone on and got something of a property before you entered into the marriage state. Don't you think it would have been better?" And then the young man looked around, and his eyes filled with tears, and he looked to his poorly-clad wife and said: "No, sir; she's been the same to me all through."

Ah, there are some of you who would never have known what your homes were worth, if trouble had not come. ...

You can not love your child too much. God did not take your child because you loved it too much. I think this is the reason why God so often takes the first born. It is to transfer your affections to Heaven and make that place the more grand and blessed; at the beginning of your life make Heaven blessed, so that you keep thinking of that place and so be elevated and lifted on toward it. ...

Now, suppose the first trial comes and you have no God. What then? Have you ever tried to see one go through bereavement without any God? I have witnessed that sad spectacle. But we want grace, we want divine grace, when bereavement comes into the house, which erst was full of sunny locks and greetings at the door, and kisses flung by little hands from the window as you went down the front steps, and the doves in the nest cry because the hawk swoops, and the heart stops. ...

Cheap Boarding.

"Board four dollars a week," was the advertisement that caused a stranger to ring the bell of a dreary Pine street mansion three days ago. As the stranger was ushered in three dudes wearing silk hats and looking otherwise expensive swept arm in arm down the front steps. The landlady gave a glowing description of the attractions of her boarding-house. "Your room-mates will be very nice young men," she declared. "What—room mates?" exclaimed the prospective boarder. "How many?" "Oh!" was the reply, "only those three gentlemen who went out as you came in. Do you like their appearance?"

"Whew!" whistled the stranger. "Four in a bed! That's how people have to economize to dress well, is it? Good day," and he bowed elaborately, leaving the dreary, shabby-genteel mansion forever.—Philadelphia Press.

Years Teach More Than Books.

Among other valuable lessons imparted by this teacher is the fact that for a very long time Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has been the prince of liver correctives and blood purifiers, being the household physician of the poor man, and the able consulting physician to the rich patient, and praised by all for its magnificent service and efficacy in all diseases of a chronic nature, as malarial poisoning, ailments of the respiratory and digestive systems, liver disease and in all cases where the use of an alterative remedy is indicated.

A "Madman's" Legacy.

"Fire!" exclaimed a man in the homely garb of a mechanic to Richelieu, Prime Minister of France, as he was entering his palace: "Sire, I have made a discovery which shall make rich and great the nation which shall develop it. Sire, will you give me an audience?"

Richelieu, constantly importuned, finally ordered the "madman" imprisoned. Even in jail he did not desist from declaring his "delusion," which one day attracted the attention of a British nobleman, who heard De Caus's story, and developed his discovery—steam power!

All great discoveries are at first derided. Seven years ago a man yet under middle age, enriched by a business which covered the continent, found himself suddenly stricken down. When his physicians said recovery was impossible, he used a new discovery, which, like all advances in science, had been opposed bitterly by the schoolmen. Nevertheless, it cured him and out of gratitude therefor he consecrated a part of his wealth to the spreading of its merits before the world. Such in brief is the history of Warner's safe cure, which has won, according to the testimony of eminent persons, the most deserved reputation ever accorded to any known compound, and which is finally winning on its merits alone the approval of the most conservative practitioners. Its fame now belts the globe.—The Herald.

ARE HAIR PINS INJURIOUS?

The largest percentage of neuralgic headache seems to be among ladies, and must certainly have a cause. Some have attributed it to the hair being tightly drawn over the head and held in place by hair pins; in this way the nerves of the scalp are irritated, and neuralgia caused. Relief is sometimes experienced by removing the hair pins, but it is only temporary.

J. P. Mallette, of the Mallette & Raymond Manufacturing Company, No. 320 South Canal street, Chicago, tells as follows how his wife was completely cured of neuralgia:

"Yes; she was sick off and on for a long time, but a half bottle of Athlophoros cured her so that she has not suffered any since. When it was first recommended to her she would not get it, as she was always opposed to taking any kind of patent medicine. But as the treatment she was under gave her no relief I insisted on her trying Athlophoros. After using half a bottle the neuralgia was gone, and has not returned since. I told a gentleman at the Walnut House, Greencastle, Ind., where I was stopping, to get a bottle and if it did not cure the intense suffering that he was enduring he could have the cost of the medicine added to my hotel bill."

"Well, did it cure him?"

"Yes; it cured him at once. I have recommended it to at least fifty different persons, and in every case that I know about it has always given the same good results."

James D. Gibbin, room 33, No. 125 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., is enthusiastic in his praise of the medicine that has cured him of his rheumatism after he had tried in vain many different remedies as well as physicians.

"It was inflammatory rheumatism that had a firm hold of me," he says. "Many times it laid me aside from my business, confining me to the house and many times to my bed. Medicine did me no good. It looked as if I was doomed to suffer on without any relief."

"How did you come to use Athlophoros, Mr. Gibbin?"

"It was in this way. My occupation being that of a traveling man, I had the opportunity of coming in contact with many rheumatic sufferers and consequently was recommended to use all the leading remedies on the market, many of which I used with no benefit whatever. During my trip to Beaver Dam, Wis., I became acquainted with a lady who was a confirmed invalid from rheumatism. She could not walk at the time I first met her, but was rolled around in an invalid chair. Whenever I went there we always compared notes on the rheumatic question. One day last winter I was astonished to find her walking around and well from the rheumatism. Upon inquiry as to how she got well she said Athlophoros had done the work. Knowing what a wonderful cure this was, as her case was a very severe one, I at once commenced using the medicine myself. The relief and cure was very quick."

"How much did you take in all?"

"Four bottles."

"Have you had any return of the complaint?"

"Not at all."

Established 1869.

CHARLEVOIX, Dec. 24, 1885.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor.

A man who is not ashamed of himself need not be ashamed of his early condition.

The second volume of Blaine's "Twenty Years of Congress" will be published in January.

Bills were introduced in Congress last week for the admission as states of Dakota, Idaho and Washington.

Somebody who has taken the pains to wade through the entire length of the President's message, has made the discovery that, apparently, Mr. Cleveland had not heard of the death of General Grant at the time it was written.

Hon. B. Gratz Brown, who died suddenly of heart disease in St. Louis recently, is most prominently remembered as the man who ran for Vice President on the ticket with Horace Greeley. He was a Republican Senator from Missouri during the war. His age was 59 years. Of late years he had not been in public life.

A Tolono, Ill., merchant bought a bill of goods in Chicago, but failed to receive an invoice. Inquiry showed that the letter had been sent to Peotone, and elicited the following comments from the Chicago dealer: "The green hands who are now trying to run the postoffices are responsible for this and no. me. There are a good many such mistakes made now-a-days. You must charge it up to the Mugwumps."

The murder list of Michigan, in the past few years, has been so alarming that many of our most thoughtful citizens are beginning to think that the enactment of capital punishment is a necessity to check crime. The lightness of the punishment of imprisonment compared with the gravity of the crime of murder, causes hardened criminals to look upon the taking of a human life as not so very grave an affair after all, and the frequent exercise of pardoning power, in such cases, causes still further contempt for the punishment.

Postmaster General Vilas has made an effort to stop the boycotting of newly appointed postmasters, which is said to be going on in some places. He has issued an order forbidding mail route agents to receive letters from persons who have collected them from private boxes for boycotting purposes. It will be necessary, however, to make this highly original plan effective, for the postmaster general to issue a circular of instructions in order that the postal clerk may know which letters to throw out after they are dropped through the hole in the side of his car.

Next year the Upper Peninsula will revel in railroads if those upon paper are really built. The Canadian Pacific proposes to build an eighty mile spur to the Sault, and the Detroit, Mackinac and Marquette will construct forty-six miles to meet the Canadian Pacific extension at Sault Ste. Marie. The Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western will build a line fifteen miles north and east from Watersmeet, which in the future will be extended to the Republic iron mine, and the Minneapolis and Sault Ste. Marie road will be extended to Rhinelander.

Canada's afflictions are numerous. It has a public debt twice as large in proportion to its population as that of the United States, and is still growing. It has a political war between its inhabitants of different race origin, and stimulated by the Riel embroglio. It has also, according to recent reports, a sporting class consisting of 15,000 lacrosse players, [illegible] curlers, 4,000 skaters, 3,000 or 4,000 cricketers, 2,000 football players, 1,000 rowing men, 1,000 base ballists, and 1,000 bicyclists. It is a nation to be pitied.

A judicial court of the Methodist church was held in Cleveland, Ohio, on December 2, to conduct a rehearing of the case of Rev. I. Dodds of Grand Rapids who was suspended from the ministry at the meeting of the Michigan Conference recently held there. The court, required by the rules of the church was composed of members of adjoining conferences, and no members of the conference from which the appeal was taken are allowed to sit. There were 16 members of the the court and Bishop Merrill presided. Mr. Dodds and his counsel, Rev. D. F. Barnes, appeared and after presenting the testimony and findings of the Michigan conference, the court after deliberation reversed the whole findings of the Michigan conference.

The three most distinguished Democratic soldiers of the war, were McClellan, Rosecrans and Buell. When the Democratic administration began to parcel out its cake were any of these gentlemen invited to the basket to choose his piece? Not as far as heard from. There were too many ex-rebel brigadiers to be served. Over 20 of them were given what they wanted. General McClellan went to his grave unwept, unhonored and unsung, so far as position under the present administration was concerned. General Buell, the organizer of the army of the Ohio, has been made a pension agent, and Rosecrans is given what is virtually a clerkship at Washington. Rosecrans ought to have been minister to Austria or Italy, and Buell Secretary of War or minister to Germany, but they were on the wrong side of the late "unpleasantness" to get successful recognition at the hands of the Democratic party.

Mistaken Identity.

You [illegible] as [illegible] lad. You
[illegible]
[illegible]
You [illegible] I [illegible] tell, you have a
[illegible]
You [illegible] sleep,
You're angry, [illegible]
[illegible] your secret
[illegible]
Well, here's your ring, and here, alas!
Your [illegible] yesterday.
I dare not read them [illegible] again, [illegible]
[illegible]
How could you [illegible] and suffer that [illegible]
And in a moment [illegible] our happiness.
O, do not weep. It breaks my heart
To say these words; and yet
I'd willingly be bound again if I could but forget.
The dew is shaken from the flower touched by an alien hand.
Ah, love! the wound that wrings my heart you cannot understand.
Ha! here to come [illegible] farewell, my love,
Nay, do not hold me back,
What! can it be? Forgive me, dear;
Why, it's your own [illegible]!

An American Prophecy on England's Future.

The American (Philadelphia) writes: —The annexation of Ireland by the most profligate exercise of base influences, and the conquest of India by the sword, may have seemed to means to consolidate and strengthen the country. They have proved the reverse. For India's sake the English have plunged into one unjust war in Egypt and another in the Soudan. For India's sake they have been tottering on the verge of a war with the great empire of the Slavs and Tartars. For India's they have been obliged to abdicate their just position in Europe, and to count as a cipher in the politics of the continent, where, 70 years ago, they held the first place. And into how many more perplexities their Indian possessions will carry them, it is impossible to foresee. In the case of Ireland the Nemesis for the past sins is still more visible. The Union introduced into the Imperial Parliament 105 members, who are and always have been an alien and a disturbing element there. These men could not do justice to their constituencies without making a disturbance in London. They cannot better their constituencies than by seeing to it that the disturbance is as extensive and as offensive as possible. The Irish people have no interest in the maintenance of the House of Commons; their one hope is to be forever rid of all connection with it. So long as they are forced to send their members to London, instead of meeting in Dublin, they are well content to have these members regarded as a nuisance. And in the last five years this has been done so effectually that the English are beginning to see that the Treaty of the Union was a gigantic mistake. Ireland is like the Scotch fairy, who cannot be brought into the House except by the exercise of sheer force, and who, when once in it, will shake it to its very foundations before she is done. A House of Commons with 103 Irish members, mostly followers of Mr. Parnell, is beginning to be seen to be an impossibility in practical politics. Hence the frank suggestion of some English Tories that Ireland be disfranchised. That would be one way of getting rid of the difficulty, but it is not one that England dares take. It would put an end to the Treaty of Union which expressly stipulates for the 105 members. The other way out of the difficulty is a frank Repeal of the Union. If that be done without any appeal to arms on the Irish side, the effect on the temper of the people will be most beneficial. It is to be done as a concession to threats when England is in some great peril, like that of a century ago, then England will have a permanent and dangerous enemy. If it be done as the outcome of an Irish uprising when England is in peril, the danger will be still more immediate. And before this generation has passed away, it will be done after some of these fashions.

Influence of Light on the Color of Animals.

As a rule, the parts of animals most exposed to rays of light are, other things being equal, richest in coloring-matter. The backs of wild animals are usually and with few exceptions (as among nocturnal and burrowing animals) more strongly colored than their bellies. Another class of exceptions may be seen among fishes of certain families which lie on their sides instead of on their bellies, and expose, not their backs but one of their sides to the light. In these fishes the upper side is colored, while the under side, next to the ground and the darkness, is not. Articulates also have their upper sides most strongly colored, although what in them answers most nearly to the dorsal column is next to the ground. The parts of mollusks which are in contact with the ground are uncolored, while the parts exposed to the light shine with varied tints; and this, whatever may be the peculiar positions assumed by particular shells.

For individuals of the same race, the abundance of the coloring-matter is generally proportioned to the intensity of the light to which they are exposed. The fact is generally understood, though exact observations bearing upon it are not as numerous as it is desirable they should be. It is well known that the skin is tanned by light, that people from the north are browned by living in the south, and that ruddiness and freckles appear under the action of the sunlight. Some people of the white race, like the Hindoos and the Moors, that live in southern climates, are frequently darker-skinned than the negroes themselves. Still, we can not affirm that light is the only cause of these changes.

Mr. Gould has observed that birds are more strongly colored when they live in countries having a clear sky than on islands or the seashore. Bechstein says that the colors of the plumage of cage-birds are affected by the shade in which they are kept. Mr. Allen has shown that the color of several species in the United States changes as we go from north to south.—Popular Science Monthly for November.

The Battenberg family, which is making rather a stir in Europe just now, is descended from one Hauck, a man of small education, who was editor of a newspaper in Warsaw sixty years ago. Prince Alexander of Hesse married the granddaughter of this man, and the result of this union was the now famous "Alexander the Greater," Prince of both Bulgarias; another son who married the Princess Beatrice of England, and a third who is son-in-law of the Duke of Hesse.

It is said on repectable authority that more than half a million pounds of willow leaf were shipped from Shanghai last year as green tea—a large proportion of it coming to America.

Miraculous Escape. W. W. Reed, druggist, of Winchester, Ind., writes: "One of my customers, Mrs. Louisa Pike, Bartonia, Randolph Co., Ind., was a long sufferer with Consumption, and was given up to die by her physicians. She heard of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and began buying it of me. In six months' time she walked to this city, a distance of six miles, and is now so much improved she has quit using it. She feels she owes her life to it." Free Trial Bottles at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

You will notice how quickly a thoroughly successful article is imitated, and also that the imitations are worthless, as they are gotten up by unscrupulous parties. Beware of imitations of Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic. The genuine is sold by Druggists, and promptly cures dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malarial diseases, poor appetite, low spirits, headache, or diseases of the kidneys, stomach and liver. Price fifty cents.

The best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

A STRIKE IN ANCIENT DAYS.

How Egyptian Workmen were Driven to Revolt.

When strikes are so common in Europe and America, it will be interesting to consider how the ancient Egyptians managed such a crisis in the labor question. It was supposed that strikes were an original outcome to our modern civilization, but the deciphering of a papyrus in the Museum of Turin shows how the old proverb that there is nothing new under the sun applies to strikes as well as to many other things. This papyrus, which is a sort of journal or day-book of the superintendent of the Thebes necropolis, furnishes curious details of a workmen's riot or disturbance in Thebes, in the twenty-ninth year of a King Ramses, who is supposed to be Ramses III. The workmen's quarter sent a deputation on the 28th of December, to Hatnekin, the keeper of books, and to several priests of the necropolis. The speaker of the deputation spoke as follows:

"Behold, we are face to face with famine. We have neither nourishment, nor oil, nor vestments. We have no fish, we have no vegetables. We have already sent a petition to our sovereign lord the Pharaoh, praying him to give us these things, and we now address the governor, in order that he may give us wherewithal to live."

These facts took place on the 27th of December (first day of the month of Tybi). The general distribution of wheat was then evidently due to the workmen, but why it did not take place is not known. Perhaps the individual who should have distributed the food was absent. Whatever was the cause of the delay, the need was urgent, and Hatnekin, with the priests present, either touched with compassion, or to prevent the affair from reaching the ears of the governor of the necropolis, accorded one day's rations. How the workmen lived in the days following is not recorded in the papyrus, but some weeks afterwards they were in full revolt. Three times they forcibly emerged from their quarters, notwithstanding the walls which surrounded them and the gates which closed them in. "We will not return," cried a knot to the police sent in pursuit of them. "Go tell your chief what we tell you; it is famine which speaks by our mouths." To argue with them was useless. "There was great agitation," writes the superintendent in his day-book; "I gave them the strongest answer I could imagine, but their words were true and came from their hearts."

They were quieted by a distribution of half-rations, but ten days later they were up again.

Khons, the leader of the band, pressed his companions to provide for themselves. "Let us fall," said he, "upon the stores of provisions and let the governor's men go and tell him what we have done." This counsel was followed as soon as given. They entered forcibly into the enclosure, but not into the fortress where the provisions were kept. The keepers of the stores, Amen-Nextu, gave them something, and contrived to induce them to return to their quarter.

Eleven days later the movement began again. The commander of Thebes, passing by, found the men seated on the ground behind the temple of Seti, at the northern end of the necropolis. Immediately they began to cry: "Famine! Famine!" The commander then gave them an order for fifty measures of wheat in the name of Pharaoh, "who has sworn," said he, "an oath that you will [illegible] again." Most likely Pharaoh never heard of the event and never received the petition addressed to him a couple of months previously.—[illegible]

A Central American Hotel.

As preliminary to the start we must have breakfast, so proceed to the hotel, kept by an Irishman married to a native. It was a queer conjunction, Celt with low-caste Guatemalan; but it was not a success in a high-art sense, although a pre-Raphaelite might have found an embarras de richesse in the "realism" of the surroundings and adjuncts. Everything was au naturel to the farthest possible limit in the way of disorder, dirt, and disregard of the proprieties of a "house of entertainment." The floor of the "dining-room" was littered with dead insects; great cockroaches traveled up and down the wall, mysteriously active; all manner of flies swarmed in the air and over the filthy linen of the table, with its broken crockery that evidently had not been washed for a month; at the table legs were tied with rawhide strings two game-cocks, which sought incessantly to get at each other; in and out of the room ran pigs and chickens, while parrots stalked around, making the air hideous with their croaks and cries.

But, despite all this, we really did enjoy this our first meal in Guatemala. The coffee served in Central American fashion was the best I ever drank. Then, for the first time, I knew what good coffee was. It was simply the essence of the berry—a dark brown, thick liquor, kept in a close-stoppered decanter. Taking a tea-spoonful or two of this essential liquor, you add hot water from a native Indian earthen jug that looks very much like an old Etruscan or Egyptian product. That cup was, indeed, "nectar of the gods"—something never dreamed of even in Paris, where good coffee is the rule. In explanation of this superiority, it is stated by the coffee growers that the berry loses much of its peculiar evanescent flavor by sacking and sea transport.—O. J. Victor, in Harper's Magazine for November.

He Was Convinced.

"Johnny, hurry up and get ready to go to school or you'll be too late."
"I ain't goin', mother."
"Not going! And why not?"
"I've struck."
"Struck! What do you mean by that?"
"Why, didn't father read in the paper last night about persons strikin' and said that it was right for the oppressed to strike?"
"And I hope you don't call yourself oppressed, do you?"
"Of course I am. If a feller doesn't want to go to school and his mother makes him go, isn't he oppressed?"
"So you have struck, have you? Well, I'll see if I can strike too."
And just as soon as Johnny saw his mother reaching for the strap, his first strike came to an end, for he darted out of the house and was down at the school in a twinkling.

Life at West Point.

"It is impossible to judge of a person's [illegible] by his standing at West Point," [illegible] recently. "If a young fellow is a little careless and forgets to invert his wash bowl a few dozen times a year, and goes to parade with a spot on his trousers, or with his boots unblacked, he may pile up demerits that will give him a poor place in his class, though he may have a good standing in his studies. The boys who avoid any kind of fun that might lead to these marks are far from favorites at West Point.

"One cadet, who spent the last two months of his cadet life in light prison, was found at graduation to have more than one hundred demerits for the preceding six months. He passed his examination in studies, but his deficiencies in discipline caused his discharge. Had it not been for them he would have stood second in a class of sixty. He managed to get an appointment in the army from civil life, and is now a lieutenant of infantry.

"The opportunities for being reported for breaches of discipline at West Point are very numerous. There are a dozen chances during the day for him to get a bad mark for being late. At the inspection of quarters the cadet gets demerits if he is found in his room coatless, if the floor is dirty, if his overcoat hangs on the second nail in the alcove, or if the shell jacket has changed places with the night shirt. The wash bowl must be bottom up, the soap dish clean, the water pail full, and towels immaculate.

"My room-mate and I once smuggled into the barracks a basket of fruit which a friend had sent to us. We placed the basket upon a board wedged far up the chimney, where it was to remain until we had a chance to invite a few friends to the feast. My chum was at the sentinel-room and I was at my mathematics, when a little flaxen-haired lieutenant of cavalry came in and I stood at attention during his inspection. He found nothing out of the way and started to leave, when suddenly he stopped, sniffed a little, and said:

"There is fruit in this room, is there not?"

"'I decline to answer, sir,' said I. My refusal to criminate myself, a right that I was at perfect liberty to exercise, made him angry. He turned everything in the room upside down, until his attention was directed to the chimney where the fruit was found. He ordered it turned into the guard-house, and the next day, being called to the commandant's office on business, I saw the last of the fruit disappearing down the throat of the officer in charge."—*N. A Valuable Mongoose.

In India the mongoose is the great ally of the native in his constant strife with the snakes. Of the mongoose there is a tale, sufficiently familiar, no doubt, and yet apt in its application just there. In an American railway carriage there once journeyed a quiet gentleman, having between his feet a basket of peculiar shape. An inquisitive stranger asked him what the basket might contain. "It contains a mongoose," was the answer. "And what is a mongoose?" the stranger queried. "A mongoose," the gentleman replied politely, "is an East India animal that kills snakes." "And what might you want a mongoose for now?" continued the inquisitive stranger. "Well," answered the stranger, "I have a brother-in-law who has been a little too fond of tanglefoot whisky, and sometimes he sees snakes, and so I am taking this mongoose to him to kill the snakes." The inquisitive stranger hesitated a moment, and then he said: "But those are not real snakes your brother-in-law sees!" "I know it," returned the quiet gentleman, "and this is not a real mongoose!"—[illegible]

XLIXth CONGRESS.

Monday, Dec. 7.—The Forty-ninth Congress met in annual session. In the Senate John Sherman was elected President pro tem. by a vote of 31 to 23. Mr. Voorhees announced the death of Vice-President Hendricks, and offered resolutions of respect to his memory, when an adjournment was ordered. In the House John G. Carlisle was re-elected Speaker; John B. Clark, of Missouri, was chosen Clerk; John H. Leedom, of Ohio, Sergeant-at-Arms; Samuel Donelson, of Tennessee, Doorkeeper, and Lycurgus Dalton, Postmaster. The death of the Vice-President having been announced by Mr. Holman, the House adjourned.

Tuesday, Dec. 8.—After the reading of the President's message in the Senate, bills were introduced: By Mr. Hoar, to provide for the discharge of Presidential duties in case of the removal or inability of the President and Vice-President; also, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; by Mr. Edmunds, to fix the day for the meeting of Presidential electors; by Mr. Voorhees, for the admission of Idaho as a State; by Mr. Hawley, to establish an international copyright; by Mr. Ingalls, to amend the pension laws; by Mr. Dolph, to repeal the timber-culture, pre-emption and desert-land acts; and by Mr. Teller, to aid in the establishment of common schools. In the House the message of the President was read, after which, out of respect to the memory of Congressman Ellwood, of Illinois, the House adjourned.

Wednesday, Dec. 9.—Bills were introduced in the Senate to prevent the diffusion of contagious diseases, to secure cheaper telegraphic correspondence, and to forfeit unearned lands granted to the Atlantic & Pacific Road. Resolutions were introduced favoring temperance and woman-suffrage amendments to the Constitution, and calling on the President to furnish details regarding international coinage and the rejection of Minister Keiley by the Austrian Government. THE JUDGE CAVED.

An Experience With a Colored Representative of the Law.

As we rode out from a town in Mississippi to view a plantation a commercial traveler for a New York house expressed a desire to go along. He procured a horse and joined the party, and his company was welcomed. A mile and a half from town we came to a notice, posted on a board, and everybody stopped to read it. It was a notice of Sheriff's sale, and the colored man who tacked it up was still on the ground. The notice was badly written and worse spelled, and the drummer laughed long and loud over "caf" for calf, "det" for debt, and "sheruf" for Sheriff.

"What's wrong wid dat notis?" asked the colored man in a very edgy voice.

"It's too funny for anything," was the reply. "Some one had better go to school."

"Dat's me, sah. I'm a Constable an' I writ dat off."

"Oh, you did? Well, I hope the c-a-f will be sold."

"Yes, sah. You come along wid me, sah!"

"With you?"

"Yes, sah. I 'rest you, sah!"

"What for?"

"Contempt of court, sah! Come right along."

"Where?"

"Befo' de Justiss, sah! We'll see about dat caf!"

The drummer was advised against resistance and finally permitted himself to be taken before a colored Justice nearly two miles from the spot. The Constable had picked up a colored man on the way, who made and swore to a complaint, and the drummer was duly arraigned on the charge, although his Honor seemed very uneasy about it. The Colonel acted as counsel for the prisoner. When the case was ready he said:

"Your Honor, who is this court?"

"I is, sah," was the dignified reply.

"Has this man shown any contempt for you?"

"No, sah."

"Then how can you try him for contempt of court?"

The old man scratched his head, opened a law book wrong side up, and finally replied:

"De prisoner am discharged, but will hev to pay one dollar costs."

RAILROAD MATTERS.

What Is Thought and Said in Northern Michigan on the Subject.

The Bellaire Breeze is going to have the G. R. & I. run a spur from Williamsburg up to this town. It is not at all likely that the G. R. & I. will ever build a road other than directly to this place and on to Charlevoix. — Elk Rapids Progress.

Bellaire Breeze: The railroad, or "a" railroad, is a fruitful source of conversation, and many have been built at Elk Rapids, Spencer Creek, Bellaire and other points, by conversationalists sitting in a store or hotel. They discuss the route, and conclude that no other possible line exists. The recent report of a less recent meeting of the directors of the G. R. & I railroad has oiled anew the tongue of local railroad projectors. Torch lake is "the rock they split upon." We are of this side most emphatically, and suggest among other reasons why the G. R. & I railroad would run its Charlevoix branch via Spencer Creek, Bellaire and Central Lake, that of its own interest in the settlement and development of this section of country. Anything tending to develop the interior of the county must appreciate the value of its lands, comprising many thousand acres. Again, it would shut out a competing line, allowing it to control its rates for traffic. A railroad cannot successfully compete with water, and would naturally shun the shore. Dexter & Noble, who are Elk Rapids in fact, have vessels of their own, can carry their own freight cheaper by water than they could ship it by rail, and would not be expected to be, and are not, enthusiastic for a railroad. A railroad will increase the price of wood. The narrow strip of country between Torch Lake and the bay offers no inducements to a railroad. On the contrary, being hemmed in on either side by water, and producing no freight, it offers serious objections to one. The route through this valley is level—no deep cuts to make, or streams to bridge, save, perhaps one. It lies through heavy timbered land, and good farming country, and offers every encouragement for a large and permanent traffic. A railroad to Bellaire is an assured fact.

Among other railroad news items the Frankfort Express has the following extract from a letter from J. B. Mulliken, general manager of the C. & W. M. R. R. Under date of Nov. 30th, Mr. Mulliken writes: "Replying to yours of the 26th. We expect now to put a corps of engineers in the field early in the spring to survey a line to Grand Traverse Bay, with branches to Cadillac and Frankfort." Prominent officials of this road not long since stated that their line would ultimately be extended to Charlevoix. Those who are in a position to know something of their plans, are of the opinion that once the road is running to Traverse City, they will turn their attention to its extension further north, for obvious reasons. The well known purpose of the G. R. & I. to occupy this shore ahead of the C. & W. M., if any demonstrations are made in this direction by the latter, is a sufficient reason for the C. & W. M. preserving silence on the question. But while all this talk is going on, there is one fact that overshadows all others bearing on the subject, and that is, that of all the Northern Michigan points spoken of as future railroad termini, Charlevoix sits as a queen above them all. The most northerly point south of present railroad and water contact; possessing a harbor equal to any on fresh water; its nearer contiguity to upper peninsula lake ports; its interior lake coast line, and future possibilities under improved means of transportation; and its popularity as a summer resort—all point it out as a natural and inevitable future railroad terminus. We believe that, under the increasing influence of the business revival already [illegible] perceptible, we shall [illegible] hear something more satisfactory than flying rumors.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Barry Convicted of Manslaughter, and Sentenced to Three Years at Ionia.

The special term of court held at the county seat last week closed on Saturday morning.

The counsel closed their arguments in the case of "The People vs. Cornelius Barry—murder," on Friday afternoon, and the case was given to the jury the same evening, who promptly returned a verdict of manslaughter. Barry was remanded to jail, and at 8:30 a. m. Saturday the Judge sentenced him to three years at hard labor in the Ionia House of Correction.

Prosecuting Attorney Corbett was ably assisted on the side of the People by ex-prosecutor Norton, while Mr. Cruickshank, chief counsel for the defendant was seconded by Mr. Fred. W. Mayne.

Durga, Graham and Moore, charged with being accomplices, were admitted to bail in the sum of $300 each, which was secured, and they are again breathing the air of liberty. Their trial is set down for the next regular term.

Barry was brought to the Charlevoix jail, where he remained until yesterday morning, when Sheriff Berdan started with him for Ionia.

Elder Kanagy filled elder VanAuken's appointment here on Sunday afternoon. Elder Iddings' appointment in the evening was not filled.

The Lyceum club on last Tuesday evening disposed of the practice on parliamentary debate commenced the week before, and discussed the question, "Resolved, that the pen is mightier than the sword," and adjourned until the first Tuesday night in January.

Bills are out for the school exhibition on New Year's eve instead of Wednesday evening.

A. B. Noyes visited East Jordan last week and came home the same day, pretty much jammed up. He says he fell off the seat on the stage,—wonder how he came to fall off!

Burns & Scroggie's stage calls here both ways.

The young ladies of the "Willing Workers" received a handsome album as a present from the crew of the Narragansett. It was sent from Chicago.

Elder Potter of Massachusetts, assisted by elders Iddings and VanAuken, are holding revival services here this week in the M. E. church.

The bazar controlled by the "Willing Workers" at the home of Mrs. Adams last Saturday afternoon and evening netted the girls about $40.

Religious.

Sunday schools at both churches at the usual hours.

Mr. Potter will hold revival meetings both morning and evening every day next week.

Christmas services with Christmas tree at the M. E. church on Thursday evening, Christmas eve.

Rev. John D. Potter, of Westborough Mass., a noted revivalist, will preach a sermon at the Union Christmas services at the Congregational church on Friday morning at 10:30.

Sunday morning and evening the same speaker will occupy the Congregational pulpit.

After the holidays, W. A. Smith will devote a few evenings to instruction in the prominent features of church music at the close of the young peoples' meetings. All who desire to improve themselves may avail themselves of this opportunity.

A Public Reading Room.

The Township Board of School Inspectors will on Jan. 1st open a public reading room in the Township Library rooms at the Village Hall. The Board have subscribed for several of the leading magazines and papers, several are to be contributed, and about a dozen of the leading dailies will be placed on the tables. Several ladies and gentlemen have promised to contribute current literature, and the project gives promise of being a success far beyond the expectations of its authors. The public library will of course be open to all. The two lower front rooms of the public building will be used, and will be open every week day from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. The rooms and library will be under the management of Miss Berdan, Township Librarian. The movement is a good one, and should receive the aid and encouragement of every public spirited citizen.

We Are of the Opinion

That the Board of Supervisors will immediately at their next session inaugurate a new and more approved method of supervising the county finances (?)

That the village finances are sufficiently satisfactory for the village daddies to put a few lamps on Bridge Street.

That the business men would sleep sounder if a night watchman were placed on Bridge Street.

That croakers should take the back seat and the live, wide-awake people of Charlevoix get to the front in the interests of our village.

That ruffianism has received a check in Charlevoix.

That there is a good opportunity for some one with money to purchase the Bridge Street House property, enlarge it to double its present capacity and get rich.

Norwood Notes.

Miss Rose Cody has returned to her home in Illinois.

Adelton Stafford who has been in Minnesota for the past nine months returned last Thursday.

The sleighing for the past week has been good and lumber has come down from Guyles & Nash mill in Banks at a lively rate.

Charles Wisner had the misfortune one day last week to cut his foot quite badly.

The Norwood Dramatic Club played "Under the Laurels" at the town hall on Tuesday evening.

School will be closed on Thursday of this week for the holidays—a two weeks vacation.

Mrs. William Brown has been seriously ill for the past week with a fever.

The Sunday school will have exercises at the church on Christmas eve.

—The East Jordan Enterprise states that D. C. Loveday & Co., have got out a new brand of cigars and christened them "County Seat." Next spring they will get out another brand and christen them, "Got Left."

Hines & Co. have everything you want in the holiday line at prices to suit you, and you certainly will regret it this year if you don't give them a call before purchasing.

It is understood that Gen. Logan will take the lead on the republican side in opposition to the confirmation of what he conceives to be improper nominations. He has been making investigations, and has a list of all ex-soldiers removed from office by the present administration. The use he will make of this need not be explained, and his friends say that the speech he made in Baltimore not long ago was the key-note to his course. Several of his intimate friends in Illinois and elsewhere have been suspended from office and superseded by democrats, and he proposes to prevent the confirmation of their successors. He also intends to make a fight against every democrat who has been appointed to succeed soldiers, and will take up the case of Postmaster Huidekoper, of Philadelphia, as a test. The confirmation of Mr. Kimball, the director of the mints for Mr. Burchard of Illinois was turned out, will be a fair subject for controversy, he thinks.

Public Notice.

Dr. Vredenburg, operating at East Jordan and Charlevoix, represents by circular, that "Dr. Kanagy of Atwood, cheerfully recommends him as a reliable dentist." Since Dr. V. uses my name as well as others without authority, I conclude that he is too disreputable to merit the confidence of my friends, professionally.

A LOSS OF $1,010,200.

Seventy-four Lives Sacrificed to the Lake Marine During the Past Season.

A table of disasters to lake shipping during the year 1885, published recently shows that 60 vessels passed out of existence during the year, involving a loss of $1,010,200. Of these 22 were steam and 38 were sail. Twenty-two went ashore and pounded to pieces, 19 were destroyed by fire, 11 foundered, 4 capsized and were broken up by the seas, and one was blown up by the explosion of her boilers. Twenty-five were wrecked on Lake Michigan, 10 on Lake Huron, 6 on Lake Superior, 6 on Lake Erie and 12 on Lake Ontario. With the loss of these 60 vessels 74 lives perished. The most notable of these disasters was the wreck of the Algoma, at Isle Royale, Lake Superior, November 7, by which 43 lives were lost.

Historical Society.

The Historical Society met last Friday evening with Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Allen.

In the absence of President Green, 1st Vice President H. Lee Iddings, presided.

The program was opened by a trio by Lincoln Kanagy, Gard Brown and Al. T. Washburn — bones, piano and banjo, followed by the regular historical paper, by Robert Miller; subject, "John Watts."

Miss Sadie Miller and Miss Mills executed a pleasing piano duett, which was followed by intermission, after which Miss Lizzie Bell gave an interesting reading, entitled "Easter Morn." A jubilee song by a chorus of male voices was received with an encore.

R. W. Kane gave a select reading, which was followed by a selection by the glee club.

The next meeting will occur on the evening of Jan. 8th, at which time H. Lee Iddings will present a paper on "Sir Walter Scott."

John Warwick Daniel has been elected United States Senator by the Virginia Legislature, to succeed William Mahone. He was an officer on the staff of Gen Jubal Early, was wounded at the battle of the Wilderness, and uses crutches.

After [illegible] consecutive month of service, a Buffalo newspaper man has just sent in his resignation of an important postoffice position at Washington. He couldn't make up his mind to be satisfied with the new way of earning his sandwich. When a man grows accustomed to a column of solid nonpareil excitement between meals—or where meals ought to be—it is difficult for him to taper off all at once to half a "stick" of leaded long primer political honor—with the honor still running wild in its accustomed haunts without a halter strap. If more newspaper men would catch on to the impressive fact that it is possible for a man to associate daily with a bad breathed pastepot and unburnished cedar pencil for a whole lifetime without once being called upon to lay down his life on the political altar at Washington it would be a good deal better both for their own and other people's business. —*Ex. —The days are beginning to lengthen.

—M. J. Stockman returned home Saturday.

—What has become of the Charlevoix Liberal Club.

—Will Badour's Christmas present was a bouncing boy.

—Sheriff Berdan has his office with U. S. Deputy Marshall, McLeod.

—No ice in the Mackinac Straits and snow about all gone.

—D. S. Way is holding forth at the Bradbeer photograph gallery.

—The boxes for the new fire alarm at Traverse City, were put up last week.

—Major Burton is giving "The Spy of the Shenandoah," at Traverse City.

—Dr. L. M. Kanagy, of Atwood, has discovered a new remedy for rheumatism.

—As we write—Wednesday, 10 a. m., —the weather is warm, raining copiously, and no snow in the streets.

—On another page will be found the advertisement of the Detroit evening Journal.

—The State Board of Church Extension of the M. E. church have appropriated $350 for East Jordan.

—Cornelius Barry has been put at work in the cigar making department at the Ionia House of Correction.

—The gambling school for boys on the south side of Bridge street should receive the attention of the Marshal.

—Hon B. M. Cutcheon, has our thanks for the Compendium of the tenth census of the United States of 1880, in two volumes.

—The Michigan State Teachers' Association will hold its annual meeting in Representative Hall, Lansing, December 28—30.

—The Herald says that Mr. Hannah's people crossed the Atlantic last week in safety, arriving at Queenstown at o'clock Saturday evening, Dec. 19.

—A notice appears elsewhere calling the annual meeting of the Charlevoix Manufacturing Co. on Jan. 11, at the office of Hon. A. Buttars.

—A person who will keep a place for the education of the boys in gambling is an enemy to society, and should be so treated by all good people.

—Baxter Post, G. A. R., of this place, have purchased a plat of ground of A. B. Upright, adjoining the Township cemetery, to be used as a Post cemetery.

—When Charlie Pratt, Sheriff of Emmet county, and Marshal of Petoskey, comes to Charlevoix, the dogs all bark at him, and bark a week after he has gone home.

—Wilson, proprietor of the Torch Lake hotel, went through here Christmas in the custody of U. S. Deputy Marshal Pratt, of Petoskey, on a charge of selling liquor without a license.

—East Jordan Enterprise: P. LaClair left Tuesday for Grand Rapids, to purchase a stock of groceries. He will open a store at the State Road bridge, about eight miles south of this place.

—A new year is being ushered in. Good resolutions are being made. You cannot make a better or a wiser resolution than to guard your boys better in 1886 than you have in 1885.

A Cheboygan dispatch of the 26th says:—"Two steam barges passed up through the straits of Mackinaw last evening, blowing several blasts of the whistle. The weather is fine."

—The Elk Rapids Progress says that Jas. S. Wyckoff is at Webster, Florida, and is acting as secretary of the Webster Land Association.—Two to one, the "Webster Land Association" is a fraud.

—Mr. and Mrs. Mike Litney left yesterday for Sutton's Bay on the tug Martin. They will be absent several weeks. Mrs. Carr, Mrs. Litney's partner, will be at the millinery store to wait on customers.

—There is a very commendable effort being made to create a religious awakening in Charlevoix. If you have serious thoughts about spiritual matters, reflect for a moment upon the dangers surrounding the boys, and make yourself a fighting Christian long enough to stamp on the boys' gambling den on the east side of Bridge street!

—Elk Rapids Progress: An interesting test of physical endurance occurred last week Tuesday between John F. Veit and O. Peterson, butcher, to which one could carry a quarter of beef the farthest. They started out each with a quarter weighing, it is said, 108 pounds, and the one which reached Traverse City first was to be the winner. If they both arrived at the same time they were to start for Suttons Bay. Bets for $50 were up between C. A. Newton and John Powell. The men left here about 10 o'clock a. m., followed by three teams, and when about nine and a quarter miles from here Peterson gave in, and Veit was declared the victor, as he was a quarter of a mile ahead. Powell collared the $50.

A Birthday Surprise.

There is something about Dr. Carlstein's home that draws, as naturally as the loadstone. The last social magnetism that displayed itself was on Saturday evening—that being the occasion of the Doctor's 43d birthday. About sixty of the Doctor's and Mrs. C's friends, at the latter's invitation, surprised the "lord of the manor," by not a precipitate, but nevertheless irresistible invasion, and the evening was passed most pleasantly, as is always the case under that hospitable roof. Mrs. Carlstein's deft hands had secretly provided a repast for the guests, and at 10 o'clock the dining room door was thrown open to a hungry crowd. That a quarter of a century hence we may be able to repeat the invasion under the same impulse, is our sincere wish.

Deserving of Success.

If there is, among our pioneer citizens, one deserving of success, it is Geo. W. Miller, our popular clothier. George came here a clerk for Fox, Rose & Buttars in 1869, and in these sixteen years he has never done anything to forfeit the good will of his neighbors. When George opened out for himself, everybody predicted he would be successful, and thus far he has been, because he knows how to please his patrons. His establishment in the Buttars' block is one of the finest of the kind in Northern Michigan. The shelves are always full, and the store is always a pleasant place to step into.

Christmas Bells.

Although Christmas was destitute of sleighing, the day was pleasant. At the M. E. church Christmas eve., the festivities were full of joyousness for the little folks, and much enjoyment for the older ones.

The union services at the Congregational church Christmas morning were not so well attended as they should have been. Rev. Mr. Potter preached a practical, but touching sermon.

Attention Sir Knights.

The next regular conclave of Ivanhoe Commandery No. [illegible], Knights Templar, will occur at the Asylum in Petoskey on Thursday evening, Jan. 7, at which the Orders of Red Cross Knight and Knight Templar will be conferred. Every Sir Knight is requested to be present.

By order of the Eminent Commander,

CLAY E. CALL, Recorder.

Fine weather the past week.

Good skating on South Arm which a good many are taking advantage of.

The snow has about disappeared, which is rather bad on those getting out logs.

Mr. Alph Joles has taken 10 acres of cedar to get out for E. G. Jarmau. He commenced Monday morning.

The Christmas tree at the Lewis school house on Christmas eve., was a success. There was a full house; the tree was nicely trimmed and all seemed to enjoy themselves.

New Year Calls.

The following ladies have signified their intention to receive calls on New Year's day:

With Mrs. Dr. Carlstein: Mrs. L. E. Allen, Mrs. G. W. Crouter, Mrs. E. M. Clark, Mrs. A. D. Cruickshank, Mrs. N. L. Cash, Mrs. A. F. Draper, Mrs. H. S. Harsha and Mrs. R. Lake.

With Mrs. D. C. Loveday: Misses Flora Nelson, Sallie Miller, Luna Washburn, Maud Loveday and Bertha Mills.

With Mrs. O. S. Washburn: Mrs. L. Blanchard, Mrs. A. T. Washburn, Mrs. J. R. Dixon, Mrs. A. B. Upright, and others.

With Mrs. O. D. Wood: Mrs. J. M. Eaton, Mrs. E. H. Green, Mrs. W. A. Smith, Mrs. James E. Wood, Mrs. Fred A. Smith, and Miss Nellie Hawks. Mrs. Wood, with her associates, will in the evening give a reception to the Historical Society.

The Boys of Charlevoix.

Scarcely a day passes but a startling reminder is conveyed to us that our boys should be more carefully hedged about by a barrier of discipline or moral suasion that shall keep them from the depraving influences by which they are beset even here in the shadow of their homes. The boys are growing up to be either men or loafers; to be the pride of their parents and ornaments to society, or the reverse. It is time for the fathers of Charlevoix to guard well against the nearer approach of the evil influences which surround their boys. Our eyes and ears must indeed be closed if we do not every day realize the fact that many of these plants in whom our hopes are centered are growing up to be morally dwarfed, and knarled and knotty scrubs, respecting neither the good, nor eschewing the bad. The billiard halls, which us grown up people do not consider particularly bad places for us to congregate, is becoming a favorite resort for the boys. No one will dispute our assertion that this should be stopped. Either parental influence and discipline should stop it, or the law should; and if neither singly or both collectively can separate our boys from the infatuation of the gaming table, then let us turn our attention to the cause. It may be by some considered harmless for a great big strong-minded man to drop in and play a game of billiards or even pedro, but the influence on the boy is bad. No argument is necessary to establish this fact. There is one institution in Charlevoix which permits boys to play pool and cards late into the night, and it is not uncommon to hear boys about the streets discussing the game in approved loafer parlance. This must be stopped! Some of our fathers with promising sons will one of these days wake up to this question when it is too late. The sunday schools, and the preachers, and the W. C. T. U. do their work, and moral platitudes are put upon the lips of the young as a parrot is taught to talk, but out in the by-ways and hedges our boys are having their minds poisoned and their lives polluted by the influences of street [illegible] and the pool and card table—graduating departments of the saloon. It must be stopped! Mothers guard faithfully the virtue of their daughters, but the moral growth of the boys is endangered by the juvenile gambling den on Bridge street, and the fathers pass it by indifferently. What an alarming percentage of the youth cause grief to their parents because of these early evil influences! These boys of Charlevoix should be looked after, and such measures taken as shall remove them from the influence of these things, or else the influence itself removed by prompt and effective means.

Ironton.

Everybody hoping for snow.

Exhibition on Thursday evening.

Dr Crouter was in town on Monday and Tuesday.

The revival services held by Rev. Potter were decidedly successful.

"Come north and get warm"—How's this for the eternal fitness of things. One of our citizens has two sons—on Saturday last one of them went north to Charlevoix in a sail boat, the other went south to East Jordan on skates, both on the same body of water.

Walter Munnay's house came nearly being consumed by fire on Monday morning. The fire caught from the stove while the family were in bed, when discovered it had burned the partition between the kitchen and pantry, a hole through the floor and some knives and forks.

—Taggart, the phrenologist, who humbugged Charlevoix people for a week recently, met with an inhospitable reception at Boyne City, and at Boyne Falls he got into trouble with his smart work, and shot at a man. He suddenly disappeared, or he would have met serious trouble.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"Medicine For All Ills" Dispensed By the Brooklyn Pastor.

The Bleeding Heart of Christ the Only Immediate Relief for Sinners—A Balm for All Wounds and Pardon for All Transgressions.

The above was the subject of a sermon recently delivered by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage at Brooklyn Tabernacle. The sermon was based on the following text:

And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus.—Matthew xiv, 12.

An outrageous assassination had just taken place. To appease a revengeful woman, Herod had ordered the death of that noble, self-sacrificing Christian man, John the Baptist. The disciples were in great trouble. There was no court to which they could make appeal. But grief must have utterance, and if there be no sympathetic ear to hear it, then it must be cried aloud to the winds and the woods and the waters. But there was an ear ready to listen. What beauty of pathos and what wonderful picture in the words of my text. They "went and told Jesus." He was ready to listen and he was ready to assuage their grief. We see Christ standing, his own face shadowed with his own sorrow, surrounded by a group of disciples in violent gesticulation, with many tears and with great outcry of woe. Raphael, with skillful hand, putting upon the wall of a palace a picture of Bible story, was not so skillful as the plain hand of the evangelist, as he puts upon canvas the sketch of the text. They "went and told Jesus."

The Goths and the Vandals came down from the North of Europe and upset the gardens, and broke down the altars, and swept away everything that was good and beautiful; and ever and anon in the lives ...

... another. There is not a person in the house but has been tempted, whether you realize it or not. I never like to hear a man say: "Oh, I couldn't be tempted the way that man is." He could not be tempted the way you are. A lion can not understand why a fish should be caught with a hook, and the fish can not understand why the lion should be caught with a trap. You may be free from certain kinds of temptation, but there are other kinds after you.

You see some men with a phlegmatic temperament. "Why," you say, "that man hasn't any temptations at all." You mistake him. He has temptations to indolence, to censoriousness, to sink down into mere latitude and longitude of fattiness; to lie down on the road of life, to stop great enterprises. He has just as many temptations in one direction as you, being of a nervous and excitable temperament have temptations in another direction.

You will see some aged man arise in a prayer meeting, and at eighty years of age he talks so sweetly of Christ and Heaven, you say: "That man has lived without temptation." Ask him. He has as many temptations at eighty years of age as he had at twenty. They are only different styles of temptations. Ask that aged man whether he has lived beyond the reach of the powers of darkness in this world, and he will say it has been a conflict all the way through.

Sixtus was a cardinal, and he wanted the pontifical chair, and history says he pretended to be sick and crippled. He said: "Now, if you elect me to that chair I shall occupy it, and I shall not live long anyhow, and then you will put some one else in the chair." He was elected to that position. He moved to it on crutches. Getting to the chair, he threw aside the crutches. He said: "While I was hunting for the keys of St. Peter, it was appropriate, I stooped; but, having found the keys of St. Peter, there is no reason why I should stoop any longer." So his crutches ...

TREASURY MISMANAGEMENT.

No Decrease in the Interest Bearing Debt Under the Democratic Administration—Why Should the Gold Be Hoarded?

Congress will soon assemble, and the people will have, through their Representatives, an opportunity to ask the Administration some questions as to the conduct of the public business. It is safe to predict that the most interesting of those questions will relate to the finances of the Government. Several important changes have been made by the Treasury Department. It is of course to be presumed that there are good reasons for these changes, but the country wants to know more definitely what those reasons are. Members of Congress have declared an intention to bring these matters before that body, and we may anticipate that the discussions will be very interesting.

The management of the public debt is a matter calling for investigation. Taking a period from the 1st of May to the 1st of November, we find a decrease of $50,081,276 in the debt indicated by the statements, but the interest-bearing debt is just where it was at the beginning of that time—$1,196,154,650. That is to say, whatever reduction was made was in the portion of the indebtedness that it costs the Government nothing to carry, while the interest charge on the rest of the debt is allowed to run on. There is a decrease of a little over a million dollars in the debt on which interest has ceased since maturity, which consists of a lot of old claims long overdue. The main item of reduction is made up of the repayment of sums that have been placed on deposit with the Government and for which certificates have been issued—old gold and silver certificates and certificates of deposit. This item amounts to nearly $40,000,000.

During the corresponding six months of 1884 there was a reduction in the interest-bearing debt amounting to over $50,000,000. Here is a contrast to which the attention of the people is respectfully invited. The policy of reducing the public debt ...

In view of the fact that it was a Southern Democrat who broke open ballot-boxes with a hatchet in Indianapolis;

In view of the fact that a Democratic Judge has failed to take cognizance of this gross contempt of court;

In view of the fact that Democratic grand jurymen refused to indict ballot stealers and ballot-box burglars;

In view of the fact that the election frauds at Chicago were committed by Democrats;

In view of the fact that the election frauds at Baltimore were the work of Democrats, in the interest of the Democratic party;

And in view of the fact that not one Democratic paper has enough honesty or self-respect to denounce these infamies—

The slur sought to be put upon the people of Ohio and the North is impudent and scandalous.

The Republican party calls for the indictment and prosecution of every scoundrel, without regard to party, who has had a hand in these villainies. The Democratic party dare not.—Indiana State Journal.

POLITICAL CRIMINALS.

How the Respectable Element of the Democratic Party Upholds Its Rascals and Its Rascalities.

It is time for good citizens to consider how their own conduct breeds fraud in elections and so undermines free institutions. It is not by the scoundrels, not by the political rascals and vote-swindlers, that the very existence of self-government in this country is threatened, but by reputable, decent and good citizens. Does any one ask how? Because they sustain the men who commit fraud. Because, however notorious and shameless frauds may be, the reputable men of the Democratic party still uphold them, or are indifferent to them, or expend their first natural indignation in strong words and then forget all about them, and support the same men ...

LOGAN SAYS NO.

The Illinois Senator Unanimously Tendered the Presidency of the Senate—He Declines with Thanks—His Reasons Set Forth in a Short Speech.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The caucus of the Republican Senators met promptly at twelve o'clock yesterday, Senator Sherman in the Chair, and proceeded at once to consider the question of the election of a President pro tempore of the Senate, made necessary by the death of Vice-President Hendricks. Senator Edmunds stated that last summer, when the Republicans of the nation in their convention nominated General Logan for Vice-President he (Edmunds) had thought it right toward General Logan and toward the party that he should retire from the Presidency of the Senate and that General Logan should preside in his place, and, as they all remembered, he had communicated that opinion and desire to the Republican Senators in a formal way, but it was thought at that time that the change be not made, especially as General Logan did not wish it to be made.

At the Presidential election last fall General Logan had received, he believed, the votes of all the Republicans who had the opportunity to vote and came very nearly being the choice of the people for the office of Vice-President, which would have made him ex-officio the President of the Senate, and, under the law, charged with the duty of carrying on the Government in case of any disability of the President of the United States until an election could be had. In this state of things he thought it right that the Republican Senators should renew that expression of confidence in General Logan by nominating him for President of the Senate, and he accordingly moved that General Logan be so nominated by acclamation.

Several Senators spoke briefly in favor of the nomination, and the question was put and agreed to unanimously. The Chairman announced the unanimous nomination of John A. Logan as the Republican candidate for President pro tempore of the Senate.

General Logan arose and said:

Mr. Chairman, from the depths of my heart I thank the Republican Senators for the confidence they repose in me as expressed by the nomination just tendered me by acclamation for the position of temporary presiding officer ...

CAPTURE OF A DEVIL-FISH

Excitement on Board of a United States Steamship.

[Payta (Peru) Special to N. Y. Herald.]

For some days past the quiet harbor of Payta, Peru, has been infested with immense numbers of huge fish and speculation being rife as to the exact classification of the monsters Lieutenant Commander J. J. [illegible] of the United States steamship Iroquois, armed with a stout harpoon, pulled away in the dingy hoping to capture and bring back one in order to find out what particular family they belonged to. When distant about one mile from the Iroquois he was seen to lean forward and let go the harpoon. The blow struck home and immediately there was seen a great commotion in the water. The monster traveled away from the boat, rope being immediately paid out, taking boat and crew along at a terrible speed.

This continued for about two hours, at times pursued and pursuers being distant from the ship quite six miles. All this time the dingy's crew had been bailing water, and as there seemed to be no hope of bringing the brute in, one of the cutters having on board two midshipmen armed with Springfields, proceeded to the scene of excitement. The fish was soon riddled with cold lead and towed to the Iroquois, where it proved to be a fine female specimen of what fishermen generally call "devil fish," a cartilaginous fish of the ray family.

The outline was nearly an isosceles triangle, the apex at the tail, the altitude of the triangle or length of the fish being about half the breadth from tip to tip of the pectoral fins. The skin was thin and rough, like that of a shark, color slaty black above, creamy white beneath, but darker along the edge. Its length was ten feet, breadth twenty-two feet from tips to fins and weighed upward of four tons. The head was slightly protuberant along the base of the triangle and retracted, the mouth being very large and cavernous. The large number of these huge fish in shallow water at this season of the year leads to the belief that this is their breeding season. The monster being too large to take on board it was slung on the mainyard, carefully examined, measured, photographed and finally cut adrift.

Partial Success.

There is a woman living down Howard street who reads the newspapers. She read in a newspaper the other day that a Boston woman cured her husband of running out nights by [illegible] him [illegible]. The idea was a good 'un. She let her sister into the plot, and the sister's husband might have been seen sneaking into and out of the house at a late evening hour. Some of the neighbors got hold of it, and some one wrote to the husband:

"Beware! As a friend I would advise you to watch your wife!"

His wife saw the bud of suspicion in his eye, and was hugely pleased. She told her sister, and there was great cackling. Sister told her husband, and he slapped his leg and exclaimed:

"Ha! ha! ha! We've got him on the run!"

The other night the Howard street man went out as usual. The brother-in-law disguised himself and went over to the house, taking care to be seen. He was just mounting the steps when a horsewhip began to play over and around him, and as he started to run he was knocked down and stepped on and walked over until he scarcely had the strength left to climb out of the yard in front of a No. 9 boot. The injured husband then entered the house and broke up five hundred dollars' worth of furniture, and destroyed jewelry and dresses costing as much more. His wife had to explain the plot in order to save her life, but that didn't restore the goods nor heal the brother-in-law's bruises.

It is very quiet down there now. The husband goes out o'nights as usual, and the Boston idea has been coated with tar and buried in the back yard until wanted.—Detroit Free Press.

Politics Too Much for Him.

A lady on Fifth Avenue, New York, quickly summoned a doctor:

"Oh, doctor, my husband is nearly dead. He attended a caucus last night. He made four speeches and promised to be with his fellow citizens again to-day. But oh, doctor, he looks nearly dead."

"Has he been in politics long?"

"No, only last year. He worked hard for James McCaulay's election."

"He will get well, madam! He has a stomach for any disease, if he worked for him!"

Political life, of short or long duration, is very exhausting, as is evident from the great mortality which prevails among public men. Ex-U. S. Senator B. K. Bruce, who has been long in public life, says: ...

Methodist Matters.

The presiding elders of the Michigan conference of the Methodist Episcopal church held their annual meeting in Division street M. E. church in Grand Rapids on Tuesday December 22. There are nine of these officials and they have general supervision of all the churches of that denomination within the territory named, their work being divided into nine districts, and each having authority only in his own district. They stand next to the bishops in ecclesiastical authority and this office has been an important factor in Methodism during its entire history in this country. The public may be interested in knowing that the following named ministers are the present incumbents of the office, viz: Rev. A. A. Knappen, of Albion district, Rev. D. Engle of Coldwater district, Rev. D. F. Barnes, of Kalamazoo district, Rev. Isaac Taylor, of Niles district, Rev. J. I. Buell, of Grand Rapids district, Rev. A. P. Moors, of Ionia district, Rev. James Hamilton, of Lansing district, Rev. J. C. Floyd, of Big Rapids district, and Rev. W. R. Stinchcomb, of Grand Traverse district.

Something of an estimate of the magnitude of the responsibility committed to these men may be formed when it is remembered that included in these several districts are 218 pastoral charges, with a membership, including probationers, of 34,119. These presiding elders, in the absence of a bishop, have "charge of all the elders and deacons traveling and local preachers and exhorters," in their respective districts. There are 253 ministers in full connection in the conference and 33 ministers on probation, making a total of 286. Besides these, there is quite as large a number of local preachers and exhorters within the bounds of the conference.

They have a very great variety of duties to perform and bear great responsibilities by virtue of the high office which they hold. The especial object of the meetings is the apportionment of the amount to be raised by the different charges for the great benevolences of the church during the year. These benevolences are missions, church extension, freed men's aid bible society, education, Sunday schools and tracts. They met as an advisory board with the executive committee of the Woman's Home missionary society, which convened at the same time. Also with the board of church extension, of which they form a part. Thus the assembling of this board of presiding elders together with the other boards, will be of very great importance to the Methodist Episcopal church in the western half of this state.

It cost the people of this country $[illegible],500,000 to feed and blanket the Indians last year. In 18[illegible] the cost of these wards reached nearly $10,000,000.

Congress is not such an expensive institution directly, as some people imagine. Three millions and a little more a year are sufficient to pay its bills.

The government now maintains 2,000 lighthouses, lightships and stakelights on coasts and rivers, besides innumerable fog signals and whistling and other buoys.

The German man of war Nautilus has raised the German flag on the Marshall and Gilbert groups of islands in the Southern Pacific, numbering about 50 in all, and has claimed a protectorate over them. The natives are said to be civilized and for many years have been under the influence of the American missionary society.

Dakota is now already to assume statehood. She has adopted a State Constitution and elected a State Legislature, State officers and United States Senators. She is now only awaiting for the bill of Congress declaring her a state. The prospect is that the democrats of Congress will make her wait a long time, but possibly they may give in before the session is over.

The Buffalo Courier ventures to express the opinion that Jefferson [illegible] chances of obtaining the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1888 cannot be regarded as flattering. And yet if a Republican newspaper should casually drop a conjecture to that effect, the Courier and all other valiant organs of Democracy would hotly protest with indignant tears in their eyes that the bloody shirt was being frantically waved in the unoffending faces of the long-suffering southern people.

Though the United States Supreme Court never hears testimony it does not object silent witnesses. Some men were engaged recently in lifting into the Supreme Court chamber a patent drilling machine. It was placed in full view of the bench and, of course, is intended for use in a case involving the rights of a patent. Some years ago a man asserted that he had made improvements in the method of manufacturing felt hats. His assertion was disputed by a powerful wealthy corporation. He went before the Court with the proper appliances and there, in the presence of the nine judges and the assembled counsel, made a felt hat, illustrating as he did so, his improvements. He won his case, too. The instances, however, are rare when such practical illustrations are resorted to in arguments before the Supreme Court.

A Lucky Prospector.

A Carson, Nevada, correspondent writes to the Sacramento Bee as follows: Last winter and spring there [illegible] I. J. Bradley. [illegible] lavishly. [illegible] miles near [illegible] [illegible], and when his money was gone he went out to do his annual assessment work. He gave to Messrs. Knapp & Laws and John Forbes, of Hawthorne 500 feet of the 1,500 feet which constituted the mine, for a "grub stake." In a short time he uncovered a very rich ledge. Last Tuesday H. M. Yerington, superintendent of the Virginia and Truckee and Carson and Colorado, visited the mine, and gave him $10,000 for 500 feet, and the next day Archie Farington, the principal owner of the rich and productive mines of Garfield, gave him $25,000 for the remaining 500 feet. Several experts have visited the property and they all pronounce it the richest gold discovery ever made in Nevada.

An old resident of Esmeralda county tells me that in a little more than six years Bradley has sold mines in that county for various sums aggregating $95,000. He is really one of the luckiest prospectors in the world. All that he has to do, apparently, when he gets broke is to go out into the hills and strike a mine that brings him from $2,000 to $[illegible]. According to his informant, he differs somewhat from the general run of prospectors, in that he possesses a little bit of frugality. It is said that whenever he sells a mine he sends the bulk of his money to his mother in Ireland, holding out a thousand or so for a big time with the boys. He paints everything in sight red until his purse is empty, and then he runs in debt for as much more as he pleases. When he thinks it is time to brace up he shoulders his prospecting tools and starts out in the mountains, and nothing more is heard of him until he has a valuable mine.

Two Poets.

In October I accompanied Lord Houghton to Roslyn to visit Mr. Bryant. One evening the two poets yielded to the solicitation of some of the guests, and each recited selections from his own poetry—a violence to his modesty to which I doubt if Mr. Bryant, at least, had ever submitted before. He began by reading "October," afterward assigning as a reason for the selection that it was the shortest of all his poems, but later, yielding to the persuasion of his audience, he read "The Death of the Flowers," and "The Fringed Gentian." Lord Houghton read, as nearly as I can remember, "Half Truth," "Strangers Yet," and "Passed Friendship." As we sat listening to these white-haired, venerable bards reciting their own verses it required no effort of the imagination to fancy ourselves transported back to Middle Ages, to the time, if not to the court, of Richard of the Lion Heart,

"When ladies sat and minstrels' strain
By knight were [illegible] heard in vain."

I was so much interested in watching the poets that what they recited became of secondary interest. Two men more unlike in their theories of human life, its legitimate purposes and results, could hardly be imagined; yet both had in common venerable age, exquisite literary culture, and undisputed social prestige. It was apparent from the first that each was trying to entertain two very distinct audiences—one the rival poet, and the other their common listeners. It was somewhat more difficult for Bryant than for Houghton to yield to our appeals. He had a constitutional aversion to being the hero of his own comedy, and it was not till refusal would seem to "dull the edge of hospitality" that he surrendered himself a cheerful victim. There was a pretty strife of modesty between them, neither wishing to betray his own estimate of his verses by his manner of reading them, nor yet indifferent to the impression they would make. The poems they selected might have been rendered more dramatically and more melodiously by a reader who had not to strive with the responsibilities of authorship, but by no one else so effectively. All who heard them felt that the lines recited by those two venerable bards on this occasion were thenceforth more to them than they ever had been or could be to those who had only read them.—[illegible] Bigelow, in Harper's Magazine for November.

An El Paso newspaper says that there died a few days ago in the village of San Mateo, in Mexico, Senora Garcia de Chaves at the age of 120 years. At the time of death she had six children, thirty-six grandchildren, 112 great-grandchildren, thirty-seven great-great-grandchildren, and one great-great-great-grandchild. Her flesh was [illegible] dried up to that extent that the old woman looked like a mummy. The deceased fully retained her mental [illegible] until about four years ago.

A gossiper in the New York Tribune says: "The [illegible] of his play, 'The Mighty Dollar,' was in Billy Florence's hand as I ran across him in the Fifth Avenue Hotel recently, and I noticed that he had a [illegible] on its cover for a title. The first two words were in ordinary print in one line above a genuine greenback dollar bill which was pasted across the entire cover. 'I can always realize a dollar on that manuscript,' laughingly said Florence, 'which is more than can be said for most play manuscripts.'"

An Absent Minded Barber.

"Yes," said the proprietor of an uptown barber shop, "Jim was a good workman, but I had to get rid of him. He was too absent-minded and forgetful. One old fellow, with a head like a billiard-ball, he never failed to ask if he didn't want a shampoo. Another baldheaded old chap got mad because Jim insisted upon selling him a bottle of 'elixir' that was warranted to keep the hair from falling out. He cut one man's ear nearly off while watching a dog fight in the street. Jim didn't mean nothin' wrong, but, as I said, he was absent-minded. When old Deacon Jones died the family sent for a barber to shave him, an' I told Jim to go up. It was that job that lost him his situation. He did the work all right—nobody ever found fault with Jim's work—but when he had put on the finishing touches an' pulled the towel off the poor old deacon he turned 'round and shouted 'Next!' so that the people heard him a block away. So I told Jim that I guessed I'd have to let him go."—N. Y. [illegible].

MACHINE

--AND--

BOILER WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

Symbolism of Flowers.

In all ages and among almost every people, flowers have been adopted as symbols, types and emblems of human [illegible] and loyalty. The [illegible] of the red and white roses which were the badges of the Lancastrian and York rivals to the English throne.

But the symbolism of flowers dates back to periods far older than the time of the wars of the roses. The ancient nations had their emblematic flowers. The special flower of the Hindoos, for instance, has always been the marigold. The Chinese display as their national flower the gorgeous chrysanthemum.

The Assyrians for ages proudly wore the water-lily. Egyptians delight most of all in the heliotrope, though the papyrus leaf, used by the ancient Egyptians in place of paper, may also be regarded in a high sense as the symbolic plant of the land of the Nile.

The Greeks and Romans were in the habit of distributing the flowers in their luxurious gardens among their gods and demigods, just as in yet remoter times the sweet basil and the moon flower were sacred to Asiatic deities.

In the Roman custom, to Juno was devoted the lily, to Venus the myrtle and the rose, to Minerva the olive and the violet, Diana had the dittany, Ceres the poppy, Mars the ash, Bacchus the grape-leaf, Hercules the poplar and Jupiter, naturally, the monarch of trees, the oak.

So we may infer that among the Romans the lily and the oak were the emblems of power; the myrtle and the rose, of love; the olive and the violet, of learning; the ash, of war, and the grape-leaf, of festivity.

Even the days of the week, as we use them now, are named from deities who had each his special flower: The sun (Sunday), the sunflower; the moon (Monday), the daisy; Tuesday (the god Tiu's day), the violet; Wednesday (the god Woden's day), the blue monkshood; Thursday (the god Thor's day), the burdock; Friday (the goddess Frea's day), the orchis, and Saturday (Saturn's day,) the horse tail.

We also find that in our time the sacred days in the calendar of the English church have all their flower or plant emblems, the principal of which are the holly for Christmas, the palm for Palm Sunday and the amaranth for All Saint's day.

Monarchs and the nations have often had their symbolic flowers. The thistle is the emblem of Scotland and the shamrock of Ireland. The fleur de lis is the badge of the royal house of France, and the amaranth of that of Sweden. The rose blooms forever on the royal coat of arms of England. —Florist.

CALLED BACK.

For two weeks I had been in a creole colony. Fifty dollars a month I was offered for my services, and as I had not an acquaintance in the country I gladly accepted. That would bring me food, clothing, and shelter more than I had been able to obtain in dear France. My two pupils, M. Rabut assured me, were well-behaved children. The girl was just 15, already a young lady, and the 10-year boy was equally apt at study. After all, I was only required to give five hours a day to teaching. The rest of my time was altogether my own, to be devoted either to work or sleep as I pleased.

It was a threatening day in April—well I remember it—when I started out to walk to the great house where I was to earn my bread. As I walked on I began to dream. What future did this new land hold in reserve for me? I had not come to it with any idea of making a fortune—although a young man of 25 I had acquired enough common sense to save me from such illusions—but only to earn a good living and lay up enough to enable me, when an old man, to return to France and sleep at last under the shadow of my own village spire. Soon I caught sight of the lofty chimney of the sugar mill—then the house itself, buried in a thick grove of mango trees, and, as I feared being late, I quickened my step. Under the veranda, already crowded, I saw people rushing back and forward—running, and no one noticed me as I ascended the front steps except a big, fat negress, crouching at the entrance, who sobbed and cried with renewed despair at my coming. There on the sofa, at full length, lay a young girl—almost a child. Her long, bright hair, all streaming with water, fell over the back of the sofa, and had dripped upon the veranda until a little pool had formed upon the flags. She was whiter than a piece of marble; the violets of death were on her compressed lips; her lifeless arms lay rigidly straight by her side; and M. Rabut, on his knees beside her, was kissing one of her hands.

"Drowned, my dear sir, she got drowned," said a good old lady of about 60 years of age, who came to me holding out her hand in the friendliest manner imaginable. "But you have walked here," she continued; "you must be tired. Of course you will take something. Myrtil!"

"Mamma! Oh, mamma!" exclaimed M. Rabut, raising his head. "You see," he said to me, with a sob, "you see she was out bathing; the river suddenly rose, and——"

His head fell forward again over the little white hand to which his lips clung.

"Myrtil! Myrtil!" again cried the good lady, "bring a glass of Madeira to the gentleman. Or perhaps you would prefer something else?"

I questioned the family. The girl had not been twenty minutes under water. And yet they had done nothing—had not even tried to do anything.

The humming of telegraph and telephone wires so often heard, is generally considered to be caused by the wind. R. W. McBride, of Waterloo, Ind., who specially studied the matter for several years on his private wire, which had a strong gift of humming, is satisfied that the wind is not the agent, for he found the sound more likely to be heard on a dry, clear, cool and calm evening than at any other time. He is also convinced that the sound is not produced by electricity, for he could detect no signs of that agent when the humming was going on, while at times when the wire was evidently charged there was no sound. The humming was accompanied by a rapid vibration of the wire. In fact, the matter is thought to be a sort of 13-14-15 puzzle of popular science.

A Practical Joke.

Mr. Merriboy [illegible] into [illegible] cake's grocery the other morning, remarks the Brooklyn Eagle, in a great flow of spirits. He thought he saw [illegible] stooping down behind the counter, so he took up a codfish, reached over, and hit the stooping figure a most resounding blow across the back, shouting "Rise up, Sir Cheesecake," and with a shriek of fright a nice, good, motherly old lady, who was back there tying her shoe, rose up. The horrified Merriboy dropped the codfish on the floor, when a hungry sneak of a dog started off with it, and, rushing across the store after it, the joker knocked over a barrel of eggs and the dog got away with his fish. "By Jove," groaned the unhappy man, "I felt, when I turned in here, that I'd do something foolish before I got out." And staggering to the window he sat down on a [illegible] pail of fly-paper and buried his face in his hands.

Massowah, on the Red Sea, which the Italians have occupied, is anything but a lovely spot for Europeans. A letter in an English paper says: "We called in at Massowah, and had to anchor for the night, and a more frightful, horrible night I never spent. Not a breath of air, and the thermometer 122 deg. Fahrenheit. This is no exaggeration, we were panting about the deck; the heat seemed to choke you; sleep was out of the question. Some negroes seemed to feel the heat more than Europeans and were groaning fearfully and pouring buckets of water over their heads, which, however, was of very little use, as the water was between 95 and 100 deg. Fahrenheit. Five Italian officials have committed suicide, and no wonder."

LINES ON AN OLD SONG.

HIDDEN TREASURE.

A Bitter Misunderstanding Turned to Sweet Accord.

TOLD HIM SO.

THE OPEN GRATE.

Before the snapping, glowing grate,
We sit, my wife and I together,
And happy in our love's estate,
Defy this dull November weather.

There's nothing like a blazing fire
To make a man feel blithe and jolly,
To raise his drooping spirits higher
And drive away his melancholy.

And we enjoy, my wife and I,
Our cheery fire when darkness lowers,
And while the cold winds moan and sigh
We sit there like a pair of lovers.

I sometimes think that there must be
Some subtle witchery about it,
But this I know, I can not see
How we could ever do without it.

So every night it's lighted now,
For thus we both of us have willed it,
And every night we have a row,
To settle which of us shall build it.

A SMOKING MINISTER.

Two Good Stories of a Quick-Witted Methodist Minister.

Rev. C. D. Bunn is a remarkably eloquent and witty member of one of the New England Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has a peculiar drawl, which adds much to the mirth-provoking character of his sayings. He is, withal, exceedingly bald and much addicted to smoking. When he preached in —— the young men of his acquaintance used to chaff him a great deal, for the sake of drawing him out. One day he was asked how it happened that some men grew very bald at so early an age, while others were well covered. "Well," said he, "some people's heads run to hair and some to brains."

At the Northport camp-meeting one day a brother was walking about in the woods, meditating upon a sermon, when he saw smoke curling up from the roots of a large tree that had been leveled by a storm. Mounting the trunk he crept cautiously along and peeped over the end. There sat Brother B., pulling away at a T. D. pipe.

II.

"Whoa! Only 'steen cents a peck."

The good brother was very much shocked, and hailed him with:

"Hello, Brother Bunn! Are you offering incense to the devil?"

Brother Bunn slowly lifted his eyes to the intruder's face, settled back into his old position and drawled out:

"Ye-as. But I didn't know he was so near."—Detroit Free Press.

One Price Only.

"Schentlemens, schoost valk in und look at dose vinter goots."

"How much is this overcoat?"

"Terventy tollars for dot overgoat, and dot vas making you a bresent of dot overgoat."

"That's too high."

"I dells you Mishter Gilhooly, I have only von brice, I never drades. Choost read dot sign on der vall 'Fixed Prices.'"

"O, that means you fix the prices to suit yourself. Twenty dollars is too much."

"I believe you heard me ven I tole you I had only von brice, terventy tollars."

"It's not worth seven and a half."

Mose Schaumburg, eagerly: "Vill yer give dot?"—Texas Siftings.

Miss Clara—Can you call the names of the different stars and constellations, Mr. Featherly?

Featherly—Oh, yes. There is the north star and the evening star and the Great Bear and the Little Dipper and the Milky Way, and all the rest. Oh, yes.

Miss Clara—The Great Bear is called Ursa Major, is it not?

Featherly—Oh, you mean do I know by their technical names? I am ashamed to confess I do not.—N. Y. Times.

The Hospitable Farmer.

"This" said Farmer Hayseed to his city guest, as he pointed to a large field, "is where we keep our bull."

"And are we going in there?" asked the guest.

"Yes, but you need not be afraid. He is as gentle as a lamb except when he sees bright red. If you will take this chalk and chalk your nose we can pass through it safely."

And the farmer chuckled softly to himself that night as he heard his guest packing his grip.—The Rambler.

The Amenities of Life.

"You are a liar, sir."

"You are a gentleman."

"Ah!" returned the first speaker, mollified. "I was mistaken. Please accept my apology."

"Don't mention it," replied the other curtly. "I was mistaken, too."—N. Y. Graphic.

Masonic.

The Masonic Festival last evening was a success. A large number of the families of the members and many invited guests were present. Lieut. Gov. Buttars installed the officers, assisted by J. Reed Emrey. Rev. Brothers Howe, of Norwood, and McCartney, of Atwood, were present, and made interesting addresses.

Lieut. Gov. Buttars, on Monday night next, will dedicate the new Masonic hall at East Jordan. He will be assisted by several Charlevoix Mason.

Bastings from Hayes.

Rev. E. W. Wood preached in the new school house at Burgess last Sabbath morning. There was quite a large congregation in attendance.

The mush and milk social at Burgess on Christmas night was well patronized, and the receipts amounted to $7 75.

One of our Hayesites said he could not eat much at the social Christmas night. After eating three chickens for dinner he could not manage over seven quarts of mush and milk, but another Hayesite made it up. He ate oysters until he bursted the buttons off his shoes.

Winter wheat throughout the town is looking well thus far.

The Indians of the Mission at Susan Lake had a Christmas tree at their church Christmas eve.

A Sunday school will be organized at Burgess next Sunday, Jan. 3d, at 10 o'clock a. m.

For winter weather, we are having it in Florida style, and what is most remarkable, the people are wishing for snow.

Religious.

Preaching at Black's school house next Sabbath at 2:30 p. m., by Rev. Iddings.

Rev. J. D. Potter, the Evangelist, began a series of revival meetings Sunday at the Congregational church, and is continuing them morning and evening at the same place. Sunday morning and evening he will preach at the M. E. church, continuing there as long as the interest warrants. Up to this writing the evening meetings are well attended, and good results are confidently expected. Mr. Potter is an earnest and forceful speaker, and a logical and clear reasoner. If any one can be instrumental in causing a religious awakening in Charlevoix Mr. Potter can. He earnestly desires the attendance of all, especially the young.

A lady friend at Ironton writes us as follows: "Through the faithful labors of Rev. Mr. Potter we have had a wonderful blessing during the past week. A number of heads of families have taken a stand for Christ, and many more, we trust, who signified their desire to be Christians we believe will make a good profession. We are truly grateful to Mr. Potter, and trust a great blessing may rest on his labors wherever he goes."

On Monday, pursuant to call, the ministers of Charlevoix met at the parlors of Rev. A. M. Parmenter, and formed into a permanent organization, for mutual improvement and helpfulness. The meetings are to be held every two weeks, on Monday, at the different homes of the preachers. Rev. James Inwood was elected chairman, and Rev. J. T. Iddings secretary. Rev. Messrs. Vanauken and Kanagy were appointed a committee on permanent organization. The next meeting will be held next Monday at 2:30 p. m., at the M. E. parsonage.

[Communicated.]

There has not been a time in the last few years when the Christmas enjoyments at the M. E. church were so great, nor participated in by so many. The decorations were of a high order, and elicited many expressive compliments. In the midst of the enjoyment, Lieut. Gov. Buttars called a halt, and requested W. A. Smith to step forward, which by some effort he did. Gov. Buttars then said:

MR SMITH:—I am requested by your friends in this church and congregation to convey to you their good wishes and sincere thanks for your long and efficient service as musical director in church and Sunday school, and to present you with this beautiful cane, which we hope you may lean on for years to come, with the reflection of the appreciation of the donors.

The cane is of solid ebony, with a rich and beautifully chased gold head, appropriately engraved. The gift was a spontaneous testimony of the church and its friends of their appreciation of Mr. Smith's services.

—Grand Rapids Eagle: Dr. S. C Graves went to Kalamazoo this morning to have the body of his wife exhumed and taken to St. Louis, Mo., her former home, for interment.

—Grand Rapids capitalists are talking of establishing a sawdust vinegar factory at Muskegon. The concoction is made by taking the sawdust from different kinds of wood, just as it comes, and dumping it into a retort heated with coal fire. Just 47 per cent of what boils over is crude vinegar.

—Petoskey Record: We regret to see a disposition on the part of Charlevoix county papers to indulge in acrimonious, uncivil and un-christian language toward each other. Don't boys! Take pattern by the Emmet county press and conduct your controversies upon the high grounds of courtesy and christian charity.

—If some of the Georgia and Florida correspondents who are just now filling northern papers with bright colored accounts of the delights of homes there, would name some of the disadvantages as well as advantages of a residence in the south, fewer people in the north would become dissatisfied with their present homes, fewer sacrifices would be made in sales and there would be less disappointment hereafter, when a change has been made in residence.—Herald.

—For a paper, the tone of which should exclude it "from homes where the young have access to it," we refer our brother of the Journal to the Harbor Springs Independent, that valuable auxiliary to Northern Michigan Democracy. Its last issue contained no less than three articles of reading matter, conspicuously placed in its local columns, that should cause it to be branded as a disseminator of rude literature. The tone of these items are so broad, to say the least, that the reading of them would bring a blush to the cheek of a lady, or tickle the ribs of a crowd of saloon bummers. The "wild ass of Emmet" may do as a political dictator, but as a journalist he is of the George D. Prentice order without the brain power of that eminently smutty writer.

Religious.

The meetings of the "week of prayer" are in progress.

Rev. Mr. Potter the Evangelist, closed his services Sunday night.

There were over 500 people in attendance at the union services at the M. E. church Sunday evening.

Preaching at the M E. church next Sabbath morning, subject, "The necessity of Law and Penalty."

Young peoples' meeting at 6 o'clock. At 7, a sermon and service of song.

The M E. Sabbath School was reorganized last Sabbath with the election of the following officers: Superintendent, Lieut. Gov. Buttars; Assistant Superintendent, Miss Alice Cochran; Secretaries, Joseph Goss and Miss Anna Bell; Treasurer, Mrs. Ella Smith; Musical Director, W. A. Smith; Organists, Misses Luna Washburn and Sadie Miller; Artist, Mr. A. T. Washburn; Librarians Mr. Fred Green and Miss Florence M. Smith. A successful year is anticipated.

New Years' Day.

The calling mania did not afflict our people this year as seriously as it did the first day of 1885, yet a few parties of gentlemen, and some stray callers paid their compliments to the several ladies and their assistants in the afternoon, and the enjoyment of the occasion was complete. At Mrs. O. D. Wood's, Mrs. Loveday's, Mrs. Washburn's and Mrs. Carlstein's,—forming a circuit of small extent, but great results—the gentlemen were received with the hospitality and grace which Charlevoix ladies always exhibit on these occasions. The tables were bountifully supplied, and all went merry as a marriage bell.

The Orphan Boy.

Speculations as to the fate of the missing schooner Orphan Boy were many and varied by those who are thoroughly familiar with lake navigation and its dangers during the late season, but all left doubt and hope of an ultimate safe turning up of vessel and crew at some isolated point north. This hope is now dispelled by a letter received on the 26 by Superintendent Robbins of the life saving service, from the keeper of the Grand Point, Au Sable station. This letter is dated Dec. 30, and in it the keeper says there has been a large amount of wreckage coming ashore in his vicinity for the past two weeks. The spars, booms, etc., indicate that the wrecked vessel was a three-master schooner, and the keeper states that he found among the debris name "Orphan Boy." This, it is thought, settles positively the fate of the vessel. There is no doubt but that she went down in the terrible storm of Dec. 6, with all hands.

The passage on Civil-service reform will be read with special interest. It is for the most part devoted to laudation. The generalities glitter with the most extravagant commendation. But when it comes to particulars, instead of repeating the sentiments expressed in the Curtis letter of some four months ago about turning out only offensive partisans, he sings a very different song. "Parties," he says, "seem to be necessary and will continue to exist."—Inter Ocean.

In his expression of original opinion the President is remarkably cautious, and frequently evades the difficulty of being explicit by a resort to some characteristic platitude. As a whole, the message is as barren of original ideas and colorless in its recommendations as it is verbose and tiresome in phraseology.—Chicago Tribune.

A NEEDED REFORM.

The General of the Army Wishes to Have His Status and That of the Secretary of War Established by Law.

The reform Secretary of War has made a new departure in the form of procedure of giving out the reports made to him by suppressing such portions as may seem to reflect upon the administration of his office. A prominent illustration of this questionable style of censorship may be found in the case of Lieutenant-General Sheridan's report. He allows his detailed statements of the condition of the army, its numbers and discipline, the location of troops, his recommendations for the increase of its efficiency, his views of a practical Indian policy, etc., to reach the public intact, but there was another subject General Sheridan is said to have discussed with considerable warmth, and which reflected upon Secretary Endicott's action in interfering with the personal staffs of the general officers, and which is only given to the public in part. The Secretary may have felt himself warranted in retaining these strictures for his own private reading, but it is a matter in which the public is also interested, and it is to be hoped, ...

FOR SANTA CLAUS.

I dreamed—'twas such a funny dream!—
That all the girls and boys,
Who have been getting skates and sleds,
And dolls and books and toys,
In stockings, and on Christmas trees,
On every Christmas Day,
Had held a meeting—every one,
From near and far away.

The talk had been of Santa Claus—
Of how his gay reindeers
Have trotted up and down the world
For years and years and years.
And how the dear old jolly soul,
Before the rising sun,
Has filled the stockings, great and small,
And not forgotten one.

And now they thought that turn about
Would be no more than fair,
And Santa Claus himself should have
For once a liberal share.
They'd have a glorious tree, and all
A stocking to the brim,
With wonders brought from every land,
And all should be for him.

Ah, if you could have seen that tree,
So green and broad and high,
All hung with presents rich and rare!
It almost touched the sky.
And such a stocking! Long enough
To reach a mile or so,
And crammed with goodies from the top
Down to the very toe!

And then I heard the Christmas bells
Ring out so clear and loud,
That all the children in the world
Came marching in a crowd,
To wish to good old Santa Claus
A merry Christmas Day,
And see what he would think of it,
And hear what he would say.

But what he thought and what he said
I never now can tell,
For all the ringing I had heard
Was—just—the breakfast bell!
There was a stocking hanging up,
There was a Christmas tree,
But, somehow, I was rather glad
That they were both for me.

MISS POLLY'S CHRISTMAS.

She Receives a "Surprise" From the Parson.

It was the week before Christmas, and Miss Polly Pritchard sat alone in her little room, diligently at work.

So far, it had been a hard winter, with the ground all iron-bound with cruel frost, the river clad in steely links ...

"Perhaps," said John, "it's Mrs. Bricknor. There's a stunner for you! Ain't she always dressed like the Queen of Sheba?"

"I can't bear Mrs. Bricknor," said Bell. "She laughs too loud, and her false teeth don't fit, and I don't think she likes little boys and girls. She looked real cross at the Thanksgiving party when we had them funny games, and told Mrs. Fenwick that she didn't think children ought to be allowed to make so much noise."

"I'll tell you who does love children, though!" suddenly exclaimed Janie. "And I love her, too, and I wish papa would marry her. Miss Polly Pritchard!"

"What, that Miss Polly that has the blue Maltese cat, and the red cardinal bird?" said Robbie. "Well, it ain't a bad idea. She gave me some bread and jam, the night I got lost, blackberrying, on the hills, and told me such a nice story about Fortunatus and his Purse, when I was resting on her sofa."

"Yes, and what do you think?" eagerly struck in Janie. "She's dressing eighteen dolls, now, for the poor little orphan girls in the asylum, and she has bought eleven jack-knives for the boys; because she says all children ought to have a Christmas."

"She's a trump!" declared Robbie, pounding both hands down upon the table. "I declare, I've most a mind to marry her myself! But look here, Janie, ain't you going to help a fellow with these long-division sums, before papa calls us in to recite?"

And then the noise of all four talking together drowned the sense of what they said, and Mr. Mellen, smiling to himself, pushed back his pen and sermon paper.

"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings," he said, mildly. "Who knows but that these little ones' voices have been sent to guide my footsteps aright? It was a sweet and gracious idea, that of preparing a Christmas for the little homeless ones who have no parents to take tender thought for them. I think I will go out and quiet my troubled meditations with a walk!"

And his walk led him to the little red farm-house in whose wing Miss Polly Pritchard sat diligently at work over the eighteen dolls.

The parson was a sensible, straightforward man, who comprehended none of the sinuous wiles of society. He knocked at the door and walked in.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor
ED. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor

Francis Jules Grevy was re-elected president of the French republic on Monday of last week in the joint vote of the senate and of the chamber of deputies.

Mr. Gladstone was 76 years old on the 29th and celebrated the occasion in the customary English manner of walking a score or so of miles and clicking his heels together in the air. An English statesman is a boy until he reaches the age of 70.

[illegible] Parker, a colored man died last week at Dallas, Texas, at the great age of 126 years. His favorite song was "Nicodemus the slave," and his dying words were: "Wake me for the great jubilee." He was a slave for a century, most of the time in the state of of Tennessee.

Though 1,100 bills have been introduced in the National House of Representatives, the roll call for bills is less than half completed. Only 109 members have yet had a chance to respond, while 216 remain to be heard from. The chance left for consolation is in fact that probably the introduction will be the last of about nine-tenths of the bills.

Now that England has solved the question of how to treat unfortunate humanity and has no longer a pauper, a criminal, nor a deserted child within her limited borders, the philanthropists have organized a society in London for "the prevention of the wanton destruction of beautiful birds and wild flowers." When the mission of this society is completed England will be prepared to slip right into paradise.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: "In the United States Sub-Treasury here there is now $7,700,000 in gold, and not a single one dollar piece. This is a rather remarkable state of affairs." And yet this wise Administration has suspended the issue of one and two dollar bills, and wants the issue of silver dollars stopped at once. It takes no argument to show the inconvenience of such schemes to the common people.

The United States Treasurer has locked up in his vaults $147,000,000 in gold and $165,000,000 in silver, to say nothing about the millions of paper and fractional currency which he doesn't think worthy of counting. And yet the Secretary made no payment upon the public debt for many months. He has just called for ten millions, however, which he proposes to redeem in gold, and leave the silver in the vaults.

The only negative vote in the house on the proposition to pension Mrs. Grant was cast by Mr. Price of Wisconsin. It is the general impression that Price saw a chance in this action to obtain a brief notoriety at a very cheap cost. In explanation of his vote, however, he says that Mrs. Grant is already rich and does not need the money; that such a pension would be as much as fifty-two widows who lost their all in the war would receive, and that there is too strong a tendency to heap riches and honors on the few at the expense of the many.

There is a good deal of justice in the claim that the country owes a pension to the widow of Gen. Meade. Her husband successfully fought the fiercest battle of modern times and in winning the field of Gettysburg gave the cause of secession one of its deadliest blows. Congress gave a pension of $2,500 a year to the widow of Gen. George H. Thomas, and $2,000 a year to Mrs. Admiral Farragut. The services of Meade were certainly as great as those of Thomas or Farragut. A movement is on foot to secure Mrs. Meade a fair annuity, but there is little hope for it in a democratic house unless a great popular clamor in its behalf forces congressional action.

It is announced, probably without authority, that Justice Miller, of the United States Supreme Court, gives it as his opinion, that a "suspended" officer has a right to resume possession of the office from which he had been suspended if the Senate fails to confirm the person appointed as his successor by the President. As this question is very likely to come before the courts and to form the subject of judicial interpretation, it is improbable that Justice Miller has decided it in advance. But the views attributed to him are undoubtedly correct, so far as the Tenure-of-office act permit its intent to be understood.

Some people estimate the ability of a periodical and the talent of its editor by the quality of its original matter. It is comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to string out a column of words upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in one weak, washy, everlasting flood, and the command of his language may enable him to string them together like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be but a meagre and poor concern. Indeed, the mere writing part of editing a paper is but a small portion of the work. The care, the time employed in selecting, is far more important, and the fact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than anything else; and that, we know, is half the battle. But we have said, an editor ought to be estimated, his labor understood and appreciated, by the general conduct of his paper—its tone, its uniform, consistent course, aims, manliness, dignity, and its propriety.—Courier Journal.

THE AGE OF DISCOVERY.

At no time since men have dwelt upon the earth have there [illegible] about the [illegible] great a [illegible] which we are now [illegible] end. Never before [illegible] so rapidly; never [illegible] has philosophical speculation been so actively conducted, or its results so widely diffused. It is a characteristic of organic evolution that numerous progressive tendencies, for a long time [illegible] now and then unite to [illegible] a striking and apparently sudden change; or a set of forces, quietly accumulating in one direction, at length unlock some new reservoir of force, and abruptly inaugurate a new series of phenomena, as when water rises in a tank until its overflow sets whirling a system of toothed wheels. It may be that Nature makes no leaps, but in this way she now and then makes very long strides. It is in this way that the course of organic development is marked here and there by memorable epochs, which seem to open new chapters in the history of the universe. There was such an epoch when the common ancestor of ascidian and amphioxus first showed rudimentary traces of a vertebral column. There was such an epoch when the air-bladder of early amphibians began to do duty as a lung. Greatest of all, since the [illegible], still hidden from our ken, when organic life began upon the surface of the globe, was the birth of that new era when, through a wondrous change in the direction of the working of natural selection, humanity appeared upon the scene. In the career of the human race we can likewise point to periods in which it has become apparent that an immense stride was taken. Such a period marks the dawning of human history, when after countless ages of desultory tribal warfare, men succeeded in uniting into comparatively stable political societies, and through the medium of written language began handing down to posterity the record of their thoughts and deeds. Since that morning twilight of history there has been no era so strongly marked, no change so swift or so far-reaching in the conditions of human life, as that which began with the great maritime discoveries of the fifteenth century, and is approaching its culmination to-day. In its earlier stages this modern era was signalized by sporadic achievements of the human intellect, great in themselves, and leading to such stupendous results as the boldest dared not dream of. Such achievements were the invention of printing, the telescope and microscope, the geometry of Descartes, the astronomy of Newton, the physics of Huyghens, the physiology of Harvey. Man's senses were thus indefinitely enlarged as his means of registration were perfected; he became capable of extending physical inferences from the earth to the heavens; and he made his first acquaintance with that luminiferous ether which was by and by to reveal the intimate structure of matter in regions far beyond the power of the microscope to penetrate.

It is only with the present century that the vastness of the changes thus beginning to be wrought has become apparent. The scientific achievements of the human intellect no longer occur sporadically; they follow one upon another, like the organized and systematic conquest of a resistless army. Each new discovery becomes at once a powerful implement in the hands of innumerable workers, and each year wins over fresh regions of the universe from the unknown to the known. Our own generation has become so wonted to this unresting march of discovery that we already take it as a matter of course. Our minds become easily deadened to its real import, and the examples we cite in illustration of it have an air of triteness. We scarcely need to be reminded that all the advances made in locomotion, from the days of Nebuchadnezzar to those of Andrew Jackson, were as nothing compared to the change that has been wrought within a few years by the introduction of railroads. In these times, when Puck has fulfilled his boast and put a girdle about the earth in forty minutes, we are not yet, perhaps, in danger of forgetting that a century has not elapsed since he who caught the lightning upon his kite was laid in the grave. Yet the lesson of the facts, as well as of the grandmother's spinning-wheel that stands by the parlor fireside, is well to bear in mind. The change therein exemplified since Penelope plied her distaff is far less than that which has occurred within the memory of living men. The development of machinery, which has worked such wonders, have greatly altered the political conditions of human society, so that a huge republic like the United States is now as snug and compact and easily manageable as was the tiny republic of Switzerland in the eighteenth century. The number of men that can live upon a given area of the earth's surface has been multiplied manifold, and while the mass of human life has thus increased its value has been at the same time enhanced.—John Fiske in November Atlantic.

He Saw His Father.

"Father," he began, after taking the old man out back of the barn, "your years are many."

"Yes, my son."

"You have toiled early and late, and by the sweat of your brow you have amassed this big farm."

"That's so, William."

"It has pained me more than I can tell to see you, at your age, troubling yourself with the cares of life. Father, your declining days should be spent in the old armchair in the chimney corner."

"Yes, William, they should."

"Now, father, seeing you are old and feeble and helpless, give me a deed of the farm and you and mother live out your few remaining days with me and Sally."

"William," said the old man, as he pushed back his sleeves, "I think I see the drift o' them remarks. When I'm ready to start for the poor-house I'll play foot and hand over the deed. William!"

"Yes, sir."

"In order to dispel any delusion on your part that I'm old and feeble and helpless I'm going to knock down half an acre of corn-stalks with your heels!"

And when the convention finally adjourned William crawled to the nearest hay-stack and cautiously whispered to himself:

"And Sally was to broach the same thing to ma at the same time! I wonder if she is mortally injured or only crippled for life."—N. Y. Sun.

An Ill-Timed Visit.

Prof. Jacques, as everybody knows, has been investigating psychical phenomena. The professor has a brother who isn't so much interested in psychical phenomena as he is. This brother called the other evening to make a fraternal visit. He entered the house, and struck, naturally enough, for the back parlor. The professor stopped him at the door.

"Sh-h, sh-h," said the professor, "don't come in—don't make a noise—there's a lady in here in a trance!"

The visitor started back and attempted to go into the front parlor. At the door he was met by somebody he didn't know, who said:

"Sh-h, sh-h—don't come in; there is a man in here who is just going under the influence!"

Then he started for the library. Somebody else met him as he swung open the door:

"Sh-h, sh-h, be careful; there's a seance going on, and you'll spoil the conditions if you come in that way!"

He rushed up-stairs and rapped rather briskly at the door of the family sitting-room. It was his sister-in-law who met him this time, and she said:

"Sh-h, sh-h, don't make a noise—you'll wake the baby!"

Then he darted down-stairs took his hat and cane, and left the house.—Boston Record.

The Indians of Alaska are said to be fine silversmiths, and their silver bracelets in particular are in great demand. A lame workman has an extensive repute, and he sells dozens of bracelets, upon the arrival of each steamer, at $3 per pair. Some specimens he gets $25 a pair for. The lame Indian artificer is a very rapid workman, and will from a piece of coin make a beautifully chased ring in an hour or so with his rude tools. The heads of animals and Indian characters are included in his designs.

Out West they have a delicacy in dealing with personalities, even in gambling circles. A one-eyed man from the mining districts had won so much money at poker that his fair character was likely to be impeached for cheating. Finally a cowboy arose and said, "Gents, it is 12 o'clock; we'll all take a drink," and, swinging his revolver around carelessly, continued, "after the refreshment we'll play again, and the next man who cheats we'll shoot out his other eye." It is needless to say that with this gentle hint the one-eyed man played a loosing game the rest of that night.

GOSSIP ABOUT SAM JONES.

The Famous Southern Evangelist's Boyhood—How He met Gov. Stephens.

As we sat under the huge [illegible] last Sunday and cast an eye over the thousands who filled the entire space it covered, the thought occurred to us, "What brings this crowd here?" The question was as pertinent as when John ate locusts and wild honey in the wilds of Judea.

We watched the eager, restless throng, and we began to investigate our own mental inquiry. The Rev. Sam Jones was a poor boy, raised right here among us, a wild, rattling chap that nearly everybody had ten hard words for to every good one spoken in his behalf. He was the very synonym of mischief and audacity, with a modicum of sharp, native wit, that has grown with his growth in succeeding years. He cared precious little about his books, as our experience will testify in a short term of pupilage in our school directly after the surrender. To his credit we will say he never forgot his respect or obedience to us, and an earnest request or a calm statement of the case would cause him to desist from victimizing the smaller boys with his tobacco juice or from playing clown in the pantomime on the sly, during school hours, which was a never-ceasing temptation to his keen sense of the ridiculous. His good nature always cropped out when suffering or trouble were present.

The writer will never forget a visit he made to our house in the most rattling period of his boyhood, to tell us he was thankful and comforted to know we were convalescing from a serious illness, in which our life had been despaired of, and even at the time mentioned we were not fairly out of danger of an early and untimely grave. The weather was severe, bitter, extremely cold, but the young man brought his frank, bright face into the sick-room like a veritable ray of sunshine, to tell us that our school-boys were all so glad we were still alive. There was in him the germ of something noble and elevated, and when he joined the church, within a half mile from our own door, at a little country chapel, we felt that the germ would expand into something that would be peculiarly his own—he would either "make a spoon or spoil a horn." How much "spoon" last Sunday's crowd can tell.

Eight years ago, when he was pegging away on a little poor circuit, he came again to see us, to pay his respects to the late Gov. Stephens. We watched the two, as Mr. Stephens rolled to and fro on the back veranda in his invalid chair, and listened to Sam's description of a dog-fight that had fallen under his observation. There was a magnetism in both that quickly found play, and after the visitors retired Mr. Stephens was very eulogistic. He inquired minutely into his history, and predicted a future from that rough, native wit, which had evoked hearty laughter, to the veteran statesman's great enjoyment.

The crowd on Sunday came partly to laugh, but many tears came also with the laughter, and it was both funny and affecting to see laughter and tears mixed up so rapidly and indiscriminately. If we had to diagnose the attraction carefully, we would say the secret of his success lies in the fact that he makes a clean breast of it, "a sinner saved by grace." If he once convinces you that he is entirely earnest and honest and true in fitting his religion to his own life and character, the citadel of your unbelief will fall. His wit goes far toward attracting the crowd, but he holds them by confessing his own feelings so honestly and crying aloud, "Nothing in my hand I bring, simply to Thy cross I cling." How God loves honesty in every shape and form!

When the record is written on high, that soul will receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done," which has kept its way clear to God's favor by strict honesty to both God and his fellow-man.—Cartersville (Ga.) Courant.

A Chapter on Coal.

It is but a few years ago that stove coal was the smallest size into which anthracite was broken for market. In fact, from the time anthracite was introduced until a comparatively recent date consumers of coal purchased it in the lump and broke it to suit themselves. Coal was used for many years simply for heating purposes, the idea of a coal-burning cooking stove not being thought of until long afterward. With the introduction of coal-burning cooking stoves began the breaking of coal into sizes that could be satisfactorily used on their grates. Stove coal had been in use for years before chestnut coal was introduced by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. The size was long gaining in public favor, but about ten years ago became the most popular anthracite fuel, both for cooking and heating stoves. Four or five years ago the same company tried the experiment of screening a size to which was given the name of pea coal. This was so small that consumers were still longer in seeing an advantage in it than they had been in the case of the chestnut size. Experience has shown, however, that pea coal has advantages which are not possessed by chestnut, and according to the reports of coal sales of the Delaware and Hudson Canal company here for last month the sales of pea coal exceeded those of chestnut. No one believed that a smaller size than pea coal could ever be marketable, but the Canal company recently began the screening of a coal so small that it was given the name of "buckwheat." For this size an extensive market has been found on the Hudson river, the river steamboats having found it a superior fuel for their boilers.

The most notable feature of the anthracite coal fields are the great mountains of black waste from the mines and coal piles which has been given the name of culm. Fifteen per cent. of all anthracite mined goes to the culm dumps, and millions of dollars are represented in land, machinery and labor necessary for the hauling and storing of this waste, which until a short time was looked upon as entirely worthless. For years inventors labored to devise some means by which these millions of tons of culm could be utilized. Ingenious machinery has been patented having that end in view. The culm, by means of this machinery, has been pressed into bricks, with other combustible matter, companies with large capitals being engaged in the effort to thus make of the culm practical and valuable fuel. While engaged in trials upon the waste itself no inventor seemed to have thought of devising a furnace or draught by which the culm could be utilized without any treatment just as it came from the heaps, until a [illegible] engineer, working where culm was abundant, one day fixed a simple [illegible] draught of his furnace [illegible] he could not only [illegible] any difficulty, but that it was better fuel than [illegible] coal [illegible] great [illegible] that the coal companies in this region at least have found in what has for half a century been cumbersome and unsightly waste a profitable adjunct to their business. There was at Rondout, at the other end of the canal, one of the establishments endeavoring to make the culm into bricks of fuel, but it long since gave up the business as impracticable.—Honesdale, Pa., Cor.

A Reminiscence of Charley Backus.

Chance placed Arthur Moreland in the next seat to me at the "Evangeline" initial Thursday night. He has aged much and wears a mournful expression, ill befitting a face that was so long wreathed with smiles, when, with a burnt-cork mask, he pivoted the San Francisco minstrel semi-circle. The dissolution of that admirable organization still preys upon his mind, and while the drummer was testing his heads between acts Arthur harped on his favorite subject. He told me a story about Charley Backus which I think has never before appeared in type. It was when Peter Gilsey was alive. Backus and Gilsey sat in the Gilsey house cafe. It was bitter cold outside, the mercury just bettering the zero mark. The conversation turned upon the stern dictates of fashion in regard to male attire.

"I don't care what I wear as long as I'm comfortable," remarked the comedian.

"Oh, yes, you do," patronizingly insisted the venerable Peter. "You wouldn't dare go out in the street in this kind of weather with a summer suit on."

"That's just what I'll do for a bottle of wine."

"Make it a case."

"Call it a car-load if you want," rejoined Backus.

The wager was made, and Backus disappeared. An hour later he walked into the cafe attired in a white flannel shirt, straw hat with blue band, corn-colored kids, Oxford ties, carrying a bamboo walking stick, and wearing a rose in his button-hole. The terms of the wager required that he should walk down Broadway to Stewart's store and return. He carried it out to the letter, leisurely sauntering down the street, swinging his cane, and appearing as comfortable as though he was on the shady side of the street on a July day. Of course he was the cynosure of all eyes, but he was accustomed to that, and appeared not the least perturbed. The wine was won, and Gilsey determined to have revenge in paying it. That evening, when Backus had responded to the fourth encore on one of his topical songs, he was surprised to see a box of Mumm's extra shoved over the footlights. The audience howled and demanded a fifth verse. It was followed by another case, and so it continued until twenty boxes of wine had been piled upon the stage before him, entirely concealing his rotund form.—Auburn Dispatch.

At the Armstrong Works, in England, a gun that will cast a one-ton shell fifteen miles has been made.

Here is an exquisite story that Richard Grant used to tell to illustrate the native courtesy of well-bred Americans: "When Gen. Washington was in New England he was entertained at dinner by a country gentleman, who lived comfortably but quietly in his old-fashioned home far from town. When the general rose to go, the little daughter of the host, not yet in her teens, opened the door for him. As he passed out in his stately way he bowed and said to the little maid: 'I wish you a better office, my dear.' 'Yes, sir,' she quickly replied, with a bow; 'to let you in, sir.'"

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Interesting News Compilation.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

MONDAY, Dec. 14.—In the Senate a memorial was presented from the Constitutional Convention of Dakota, with a draft of a constitution under which admission to the Union is asked. A motion was agreed to increasing the membership of the Committee on Appropriations to ten, and the Chair appointed Mr. Logan as the additional member. Mr. Logan was also appointed Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. Sewell, at his own request, being released from that position. A message was received from the President transmitting the correspondence with Austria regarding Minister Keiley. Bills were introduced to suspend the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to make the postal rate on second class matter one cent per pound. In the House discussion over the revision of the rules occupied the entire session.

TUESDAY, Dec. 15.—Bills were passed in the Senate giving to Mrs. U. S. Grant a pension of $5,000 per annum and the franking privilege, and relieving from political disabilities General A. R. Lawton, of Georgia. Bills were introduced for the admission of a portion of the Territory of Dakota as a State and to pension soldiers of the Mexican war. A joint resolution was introduced for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that the President and Vice President shall hereafter be elected for a term of six years, and that they shall be ineligible to a re-election, and that the Vice President shall be ineligible to the office of President after he shall have filled the same in case of a vacancy therein. A proposed amendment to the rules providing that no liquor be sold in the Capitol was defeated by a vote of 36 nays to 20 yeas. In the House a resolution was offered providing for a holiday recess from Tuesday, December 22, until Tuesday, January 5. The remainder of the session was taken up with the discussion on the revision of the rules.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 16.—In the Senate Mr. Teller introduced a bill to provide for the free and unlimited coinage of the silver dollar. Mr. Butler offered a resolution directing the Committee on Territories to report by what authority a Legislature has been organized in the Territory of Dakota. A message from the President was received, asking authority to use certain funds for the relief of the Cheyenne Indians. The remainder of the session was taken up in discussing the Presidential Succession bill. In the House the Senate bill removing the political disabilities of Alexander R. Lawton, of Georgia, was passed. Debates upon the proposed revision of the rules completed the day's work.

THURSDAY, Dec. 17.—The Presidential Succession bill was passed in the Senate. John Hipple Mitchell, of Oregon, was sworn in. Bills were introduced for the sale of the Cherokee reservation in Arkansas; to encourage the erection of monuments on Revolutionary battle-fields, to locate a branch soldiers' home, costing $250,000, in the Northwest, and to provide for the issue of silver certificates. In the House the time was principally occupied in the discussion of the revision of the rules.

FROM WASHINGTON.

DURING the eleven months ended November 30 the total value of the exports of domestic cattle and hogs, and of beef, pork and dairy products from the United States was $85,205,947, against $85,215,441 during the same period in 1884.

IN his recent report the Commissioner of Navigation places the total number of vessels employed on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts on June 30, 1885, at 19,126, and their tonnage at 2,455,720. Of this number 13,862 were sailing vessels, 4,111 steam vessels, 250 canal boats and 894 barges.

THE exchanges at twenty-six leading clearing-houses in the United States during the week ended on the 12th aggregated $1,031,740,649, against $1,071,874,388 the previous week. As compared with the corresponding week of 1884, the increase amounts to 30.5 per cent.

DURING the eleven months ended November 30 the total value of breadstuffs exported was $113,639,121, same period in 1884, $152,451,891.

The Boy Question.

To the Editors of the Charlevoix Sentinel.

I notice in your issue of Dec. 30th, an article headed "The Boys of Charlevoix." It is encouraging to see this subject beginning to attract attention. A little agitation will result in good.

In a paper read before the Historic Society a few weeks ago, a few hints were thrown out to parents on this subject, and it is to be hoped that the agitation may be continued until still more good will result to the morals of our boys.

In discussing this question I do not think we should be too harsh with the boys, nor with the keepers of the places of amusement, either on the east or west side of Bridge street, lest we place the responsibility where it does not belong. The keepers of these places pay into the public treasury a stipulated sum for the privilege of conducting their business. Therefore the responsibility for the existence of such places should be divided between the keepers thereof and the city fathers.

Again, we should remember that boys are but little men, and imitative men at that. A boy generally looks upon his father as being the best man in the village, if not in the world, and, of course, whatever the father does is right in the eyes of his hopeful. Now if we grown up people do not consider such places particularly bad for us, why should they be so for our boys? Any places that the city officers do not only license but some of them help to make popular by their presence and participation in their games should not be a bad place for their boys.

What right has a father to condemn in his son what he openly practices himself, or on what ground can an officer condemn what he voted to license, and what by his presence and participation he helps to keep up.

A plea for temperance comes with very poor grace from a man who would take as a pledge from a poor inebriate who wishes to "raise the wind" an article worth four times the value of the money loaned; or the request for prayers for the lost young men of the place from a man who had by spending both time and money at a gaming table, lent his influence and example to lead the young men on in their downward course. Let us begin this reform in a common sense way. Let each set the proper example before his boys, by avoiding such places, then we can consistently reprove them when they are found there, without awakening in their minds the thought often expressed in the words "you are another."

Cannot the most of us look back to our boyhood days and remember what our feelings were when being punished for taking a smoke out of father's pipe, or a drink out of his bottle. What was our reasoning in regard to the justice of the case? Such unjust punishments have been the starting-point in the reckless course of many a boy. If any of us have contracted habits that we know to be wrong, and our boys should show a disposition to follow, all we can or should do is to reason with them, and try to persuade them to avoid the evil habit that has so overcome us. Show them that we feel that we have done wrong in yielding to the habit; that we are sorry, and are doing our best to overcome the besetment, but never be the hypocrite.

Let us try to make home more pleasant for the boys; not be so particular about a little noise, and if the chairs are upset and the carpet littered, let us put things to rights without a frown.

If the older boys of the village would do their duty there would be less danger of the younger ones being led into temptation.

Yours,
CITIZEN.

Secretary Manning calls the tariff "a legacy of the war." So is the national debt. And there is little sense in trying to abolish the former while the latter remains undisposed of.

There seems to be serious danger of an an epidemic of diptheria in portions of the State this winter. It is thought by some good authorities that this is in a measure caused by the use of potatoes infected by rot.

The last months of Grant's life were full of kindliest thoughts for those whom he had met in battle. Toombs to the last was unforgiving.

General and Political.

Detroit prides itself on having spent five and a quarter of millions of dollars in building during the year just closed.

Detroit had a $1,400,000 fire on the 1st, in which White's Grand Theater, and D. M. Ferry's seed establishment were entirely destroyed.

A terrible explosion in a colliery in Wales last week caused the death of nearly one hundred miners, while many were badly burned and injured.

During the last year the government's expenses were $16,000,000 greater than in 1884, and the receipt $25,000,000 less. Let's have some more reform.

It is stated at London that Russia and Austria are secretly arming and that both these countries have sent orders to England for large quantities of stores for their respective armies.

A contract has been signed granting a concession for a railroad from the Upper to the Lower Congo country in Africa, and the first issue of stock, about $5,000,000 will soon be opened.

Thomas Jefferson, during his presidential term, a period of eight years, made thirty-nine removals from office, for cause. In the words of the Irish woman, the present administration reminds one so much of Jefferson because it's so different.

From 1881 to 1885 the public debt was reduced $74,000,000 per year—a total of $296,000,000. Since the Democrats came into power not a bond has been redeemed; and in November the debt was increased $5,000,000. These are good things to remember.

The opening of the new year finds Russia and Austria armed at every possible point. Turkey is still massing troops on the Macedonian frontier, and Greece shows no signs of disbanding her forces. Krupp, the German gun maker, has turned out more cannon for the various Powers the first month than in the previous year.

Lodge 42 F. & A. M. of Pittsburg celebrated its 100th anniversary one Sunday recently with appropriate religious ceremonies, the anniversary exercises continuing through Monday with a reception and banquet on the evening of that day. During the century of the Lodge's existence not a single regular meeting has ever been missed.

A Mr. Buell, connected with the Export Lumber Co., of New York, gives it as his opinion that the lumber production of this country is now a matter of close calculation. The Michigan forests are disappearing so rapidly that he thinks they will be depleted within the next ten years to an extent that will give other parts of the continent the control of the market price.

The Mayor of New York city has received from the Chinese minister a check of $300 which has just been cabled from Li, viceroy of China, as a contribution to the Grant monument fund. The minister adds to this the sum of $200 as his own contribution, and together they make a grateful and appropriate testimonial to the memory of the dead hero, from this distant people.

The second court of Alabama claims expired by limitation last week. The work that has been accomplished by this second court during its two years' existence is claimed to be without parallel in the history of jurisprudence. It has passed upon all claims that were filed before it. The total amount of claims of the two classes aggregated over $28,000,000. Judgments of the first class, or cases arising from direct loss by confederate cruisers, amounted to $2,000,000, principal with interest. The judgment in the cases of indirect losses, (the second class) are so numerous that the sum remaining, of the $9,000,000 residue from the first court will only pay about fifty cents on the dollar to the claimants.

Philadelphia Press: There are but two sides to this question. Protection is either right or wrong. There is no middle ground. Mr. Wells admits that protection is right for a limited period and a limited degree. Then it is only a question of degree and not of principle with the Chicago convention advocates. And what is the degree of protection accorded? The tariff must be low enough to admit British goods and close up American manufactories. That is the degree, or at least, it is Mr. Wells' degree.

Commissioner Newell, of the State Land Office, has submitted his annual report. The number of acres disposed of during the year was 55,166.31, the number of acres held by the State September 30, 1885, 192,859.31, and the number of acres subject to sale at that time was 636,109. The sales of the year were divided as follows: Agricultural College lands, 824 acres, proceeds, $1,722; Primary School Lands, 10,159 acres, $11,666.40; Swamp lands, 38,850 acres, $42,590.86; homestead licenses covering 5,277 acres; patented to homesteaders, 5,722 acres. The sum of $1,263 has been paid into the Treasury for fees, plats and field notes, and the receipts for the year for taxes on part paid lands were $6,713.38.

Capt. Meade, of the new U. S. steamer Dolphin, is in Washington, but has not yet made his official report to the Secretary of the Navy, he declining to be interviewed with regard to the performance of his ship. The Dolphin sailed from New York for the capes, and thence turned toward the Bermudas in search of a gale. She encountered a twenty-four hour gale, during which the wind reached a velocity of 70 miles an hour. The vessel was placed in several trying positions with regard to the sea, and the shaking up which the officers and crew received made them all seasick. The ship made twelve knots an hour throughout the gale, and from this it is inferred her performances were very good. It is not learned if she suffered any damage.

The Dead of 1885.

The year just passing away takes with it many illustrious names whose possessors will be long missed in their various walks in life, and a notable thing is, that many of their deaths were of an unexpected, or in some way, of a peculiarly sad character.

In our own country the most noteworthy death is that of the great commander, U. S. Grant, whose last days were days of such deep grief to the entire nation, and whose name will ever be a cherished memory.

Among the prominent republicans who have died during the year were Schuyler Colfax, ex-Secretary Frelinghuysen, ex-Senators Fenton and Sharon.

The democrats have lost Vice-President Hendricks, ex-Governor B. Gratz Brown, Robert Toombs, Jacob Thompson, and ex-Senator Gwin.

In the literary world there have passed away T. S. Arthur, Richard Grant White, Susan Warner, the author of the "Wide Wide World," Hellen Hunt Jackson, Henry M. Shaw, better known as "Josh Billings," Dr. Joseph Alden, Hinton Rowen Helper, and others of lesser fame.

In the religious world the catholic church loses Cardinal McCloskey, the episcopal, Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, the methodist, Dr. Benjamin F. Tefft, and the presbyterian, Dr. Samuel Ireneus Prime.

The army has had its ranks thinned by the stepping out of Gen. Geo. B. McClellan, Gen. Chas. McDougal, Gen. Irvin McDowell, Gen. James McQuade and Rear Admiral Geo. H. Preble.

Among many others whom the world will miss are William Vanderbilt, Emery A. Storrs, Malcolm Hay, John McCullough, the famous actor, Charles Wright, one of the leading botanists of America, Elizur Wright, statistician and writer, James W. Marshall, discoverer of gold in California, Dr. Leopold Damrosch, musician, Col. W. A. Pond, the music publisher, and Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines.

Spain lost her young king Alfonso, and her brave Marshal Serrano.

Germany mourns Prince Frederick Charles, the dashing Red Prince of many campaigns, and Franz Abt, the sweet song writer.

England points with sorrow to the graves of Sir Moses Montefiore, the centenarian philanthropist; Richard Monckton Milnes, poet and essayist; gallant Fred Burnaby, slain in battle, Sir Francis Hincks and the brave General Gordon.

El Mahdi, the false prophet, and Oliver Pain have also accomplished their warfare.—Herald.

The exhibition on Tuesday night was a decided success, reflecting much credit on both teachers and scholars. The house was well filled and the school realized the sum of $15.20.

Mr. John Morehouse and his sister, Miss Anna, visited their many friends here last week—Miss Anna remains with her friend, Miss Friel, for a few days.

R. M. Cherrie returned from Chicago on Friday.

AN ORDINANCE

To Require the use of Bells, on Either a Team or Sleigh, for the Safety of Foot Travelers.

[ADOPTED DECEMBER, 31st, 1885.]

The village of Charlevoix ordains, that if any person or persons shall drive or cause to be driven, faster than a walk, on any highway within the corporate limits of the village of Charlevoix, any sleigh, sled or cutter or other vehicle used as a substitute for either, drawn by horses or mules or by a horse, mule or donkey, without having bells on at least one of the animals so used, or with out having bells attached to such sleigh, sled, cutter or other vehicle so drawn, in such a manner as to warn foot travelers of its approach, he or they shall on conviction thereof be fined not exceeding [illegible] dollars and costs of prosecution and in default of payment of said fine, shall be confined in the village lock-up, not more than ten days, in the discretion of the court before whom the conviction is had.

I hereby certify that the above ordinance was unanimously adopted Dec. 31 1885.

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 11th day of February, A. D. 1883, executed by Charles W. Fox and Lydia E. Fox, his wife, of the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, to Caroline S. Blair, of the city of Newark and state of New Jersey, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Charlevoix, in Liber 7 of mortgages on page 153, on the 16th day of February, A. D. 1883, and whereas, according to the terms of said mortgage the interest thereon was to be paid annually at the rate of eight per cent per annum, and in case said interest should not be paid when the same became due, or within thirty days thereafter, then the mortgagee or assigns in said mortgage might, at her option, declare the whole amount of principal and interest to be due and payable immediately thereafter, and more than two years having elapsed since the execution of said mortgage and no interest having been paid thereon the said mortgagee hereby elected to declare the whole amount of said mortgage to be now due and payable; and whereas, the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of $[illegible]1.31 of principal and interest, and which is the whole amount claimed to be unpaid on the said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law or in chancery to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's hall, that being the building in which the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix is held, at the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, on Thursday the seventh day of January, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day; which said premises are described in the said mortgage as follows to wit: The south half (½) of the north-east quarter (1-4) and the north-east quarter (1-4) of the north-east quarter (1-4) of section twenty-two (22) in township thirty-four (34) north of range four (4) west, Charlevoix county, Michigan.

Local News.

—Round Lake affords fine skating.

—The reading room had 82 callers last week.

—Iron men feel better now that iron has gone up from $16 to $26 per ton.

—Charley See, son of S. M. See, is spending the winter with friends in Canada

—H. P. Cook is doing good work as night watchman. He has been appointed deputy Marshal.

—E. M. Clark will get out a considerable quantity of logs and wood from the vicinity of Susan Lake.

—Mrs. E. Keltner of Traverse City, arrived Saturday and is visiting her father, James Inwood, for a few days.

—Geo. W. Miller speaks to his many patrons in his advertising space this week. Mr. Miller has an unusually complete line of clothing and furnishing goods.

—A Port Huron dispatch states that the schooner McGruder arrived there recently from Oscoda with lumber for Detroit, being the latest arrival in 30 years.

—In the Rifenburg flouring-mill the rollers are set and much of the other machinery, and the spouting is being put in. They now have about 9,000 bushels of grain stored.

—F. J. Smith of Petoskey, the well known mail route contractor, has bought the Tracy house of that place and is giving it a thorough refitting preparatory to re-opening it next month.

—A generous fall of snow last night.

—The Begle bakery is closed until spring.

—Chas. Swallow is reading law in the office of J. Milo Eaton.

—J. Reed Emrey returned from his Chicago trip on Monday.

—Goodley Peterson shot at Elk Rapids by Contourier, will live.

—The large force pump for the Rifenburg Milling Co. has arrived.

—The Charlevoix Savings Bank is connected with the telephone exchange.

—Rev. Clement J. Strang occupied the Congregational pulpit Sunday evening.

—There is talk of the Elk Rapids Iron Co. shipping another cargo of iron to England.

—Some of our correspondents are logging. Gentlemen, let us hear from you often.

—O. S. Washburn will leave the last of next week to attend Masonic Grand Lodge in Detroit.

—It is gratifying to note that the SENTINEL's note of warning on the bay question has had a good effect.

—Stillman Parker has begun his winter campaign against Mackinaw trout and finds the fishing through the ice on Pine Lake excellent.

—Our former townsman, Thurlow Weed, who removed to Dakota some years ago, harvested 100 acres of wheat and 26 of flax last season.

—Miss Addie Lewis left Monday for Olivet, where she will attend college until summer. The Doctor never made a more level-headed investment than this.

—All last week when Charlevoix was in the full enjoyment of good sleighing, that part of the state south of Reed City was as barren of snow as the business places were of business, while the ruts were only a little lower than the historic hills beyond the Boyne.

—The Mancelona furnace will start up about Jan. 15 and run out 1,200 tons of pig iron for which they have ore on hand. The run will require about a month's time, and if at the end of that time the price of pig iron continues to incline upward Mr. Otis will probably secure more ore and keep the furnace running indefinitely.

—Advertising on the fences, by painting on the boards, fences, stumps, etc., like epitaphs on tomb stones, speaks to the passers by and warns that as they, the old firm spoken of on the fence, are now defunct, so they will shortly be. As a man rides along reading these epitaphs approaching any town, he cannot help thinking he is getting into a dead place. All live men in business have their ads in their local newspapers.—Ex.

—H. S. Begle the baker, is in Harbor Springs.

—T. E. Chamberlain, of Petoskey, was in town yesterday.

—Pine and Round lakes froze over last week Tuesday night.

—J. L. Hurd & Co., have a new advertisement. Look it over.

—For the first time in several years, the upper channel is safe for skating.

—Miss Minnie Lewis, who returned from California last week, will remain.

—In even a tropical climate like this, there are not many sun strokes reported now-a-days.

—B. F. Ingalls, of Boyne, was in town Monday, and C. W. Sutton, of East Jordan, paid our burg a visit yesterday.

—The honorable President of the Lime Kiln Club is suffering from indisposition—that is, he is indisposed to keep out of our tobacco box.

—John St. John, who was employed last year and before in the Charlevoix tin shops has become so insane as to render his removal to Kalamazoo necessary.

—Joe Beauvais went up Pine Lake on an ice boat yesterday in search of a missing row boat that had been stolen from his boat house on the Chicago resort grounds.

—P. A. Earl is a genial, well versed gentleman of Elgin, Ills., who has been a reader of the SENTINEL for the past five years. Last Saturday Mr. Earl arrived in Charlevoix with the intention of buying or renting land near town for use as a market garden.

—A new covered stage is being built at Petoskey for the Charlevoix stage line. It will be larger, warmer and more conveniently arranged than any in this region. It will be placed on the route this week under the command of that efficient driver, "Capt." Bi Smith.

—Mr. Smith of the Sentinel, Charlevoix, was presented Christmas, with a handsome gold headed cane by the members of the M. E. church, who thus expressed their appreciation of his valuable services as musical director in church and Sunday school for a long time. See what an editor gets for having music in his soul!—Herald.

—What do you think of the following as a sign of the times: Notice was posted last Saturday evening at all the mills of the Chicago rolling mill Co., signed by President O. W. Potter, that the pay of all laborers, aggregating over 600, would be voluntarily advanced sixty cents each week, to take immediate effect. The news created general rejoicing.

—Big Rapids Pioneer: Rozelle Rose, the editor of the Petoskey Democrat, is reported in hard luck. A few weeks since, Rose was appointed route agent on the mail route between Fort Wayne and Cadillac, in place of Jesse Minchin, whose republicanism was offensive, and left Mrs. Rose to look after the paper. It is said that a few days ago Mrs. Rose skipped with "a handsomer man," taking with her all available funds.

—The McGibeney Family recently gave a concert at Fort Scott, Kansas, and the Daily Monitor has this to say concerning Mrs. Jessie McGibeney, well known here: "A pleasant feature of the entertainment, though, was the cornet solo by Mrs. Frank McGibeney, in the title of "Surf Polka;" it gave the lady an opportunity to demonstrate the most important fact that she was a student. Not only that the audience would not submit to but one appearance of the lady, but vociferously demanded a repetition of the solo, which was acceded. Mrs. McGibeney in her particular forte cannot be excelled.

—The many Charlevoix friends of Dr. C. A. Perrin, formerly of this place, will be pleased to read the following concerning that genial gentleman, which we clip from the Cheboygan Tribune: "The Northwestern Hospital has been branching out. Dr. C. A. Perrin left Tuesday morning to fit out a new hospital at Marquette, and take charge of the same as medical superintendent. The company has leased a large new building that has just been completed, and it is being furnished in elegant style. The building is heated by steam and is conveniently arranged for the purpose. It will contain twenty beds, all new, and fitted up with special reference to the comfort of the patients. This makes a chain of three hospitals managed by the company, and purchasers of tickets are entitled to treatment and board at either of them. The hospital at Cheboygan is under the care of Dr. T. A. Perrin, medical superintendent, and J. Milo Wilcox, resident manager. That at Marquette is under the care of Dr. C. A. Perrin, medical superintendent, and the one at Marinette, Wis., is in charge of Doctors Mann and Stewart. All three are provided with the best of surgical appliances, the best system of ventilation, hot and cold baths, and every thing to expedite recovery from accident and disease. The physicians are all successful practitioners and experienced surgeons. Dr. C. A. Perrin was one of Cheboygan's leading and successful physicians, and we can cheerfully commend him to the citizens of Marquette as a gentleman and physician. We regret that he leaves Cheboygan.

—There seems to be a much better condition of things in the market as regards the activity of forest products—more especially in ties and posts. From offers of 16 cents for ties and five for posts a month ago, contracts have advanced to 18 and six, respectively, and on Monday an offer was made of twenty cents for ties, and eight for posts. It looks as it, with more snow, movements will be lively in all that our forests and swamps produce. Prices are good, and the chances are good for their holding up.

—Reed City has a few citizens who opened the new year in jolly good style. Four of the solid city dads dubbed themselves the "Solid Muldoons," and made calls on their friends, clad in yellow and red calico, in fantastic designs, and left round pasteboard cards of plainest design. Another party of young men secured a hack and four horse team with two drivers appropriately dressed, and made the rounds in fine shape. Four of the business men whose interests are more or less in lumber, had cards printed on small pieces of their boards, and made their calls on a load of lumber, while the Reed City glee club made a tour on a couple of logging carts drawn by a traction engine.

Historical Society.

The Historical Society met last Friday evening at the pleasant parlors of Dr. and Mrs. Carlstein, with a large number of members in attendance, President E. H. Green in the chair.

The programme was opened with a violin solo by F. A. Cochran, followed by a select reading by Mrs. W. A. Brown, entitled "Man was made to mourn."

A vocal duett by Miss Bertha Mills and A. T. Washburn, entitled, "Go Where the Mists are Sleeping" was followed by a selection by Miss Alice Cochran.

After an intermission, Miss Aggie Miller and Al. T. Washburn sang a German duett, after which the paper of the evening was presented by H. Lee Iddings, on Sir Walter Scott.

Mrs. E. M. Clark and Mrs. A. F. Draper sang a pleasing duett, and Dr. Carlstein closed the exercises with an interesting paper on "Peru."

The next meeting will be held in the parlors of Mrs. Nelson Atchin. Paper by Miss Lua Washburn on "Alfred the Great."

Masonic Mention.

L. W. Cole is the new High Priest of Emmet Chapter.

Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock is a Knight Templar.

A Masonic Lodge exists within the walls of Jerusalem.

Lord Randolph Churchill, the eminent British statesman, is a Mason.

The State of Michigan has 30,000 Masons, and over 500 lodges in good working order.

Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, is fifteen years old this winter, and has over 80 members.

The Masons in Canada are agitating the question of building a home for indigent Masons.

Col. J. H. McLaughlin, the famous athlete, is a Knight Templar, and a member of Detroit Commandery.

David Davis, of Illinois, is proud to wear the lambskin apron upon his colossal abdominal protuberance.

Three Bishops of the M. E. church are Knights Templar, and very few of the leading clergymen of that church are outside the mystic circle.

Charlevoix Lodge meets on the Tuesday evening before the full moon in each month. Emmet Chapter (Petoskey) meets on the first Monday, and Ivanhoe Commandery the first Thursday of each month.

Jeff Davis says he was neither a Mason nor a rebel, consequently Masonry did not save him from punishment as alleged. He says, however, that his father was a Mason, and he has a high regard for the institution.

About $5,000 is already pledged for the Michigan Masonic Home. The Trustees held their monthly meeting at Grand Rapids last week and added several members, making a total of 300. Circulars have been sent to the Lodges throughout the State, inviting their attention and assistance, and a canvasser will soon make a tour of the State in its interest. It is hoped that the Home will be opened in the spring.

Cheboygan Tribune: Watts S. Humphrey, accompanied by Sir Knight W. H. Daley, left last evening for Petoskey to attend a meeting of Knight Templar where the genial Watts will take the degrees of the council and Knight Templar. Sir Knights J. C. Webster, Alex McDonald and James Barclay left for the same objective point to see that Watts stands the racket in good shape. Mr. Humphrey will make the eighth Sir Knight in Cheboygan, within one of a sufficient number to establish a commandery. The probabilities are that before many months a commandery will be organized here, there being a number of Masonic brethren who think favorably of becoming Sir Knights, but who do not care to spare the time to go to Petoskey to be initiated.

Episcopal Visitation.

Bishop Gillespie will visit Charlevoix on Sunday Jan. 24. Services morning and evening. Would like to see all persons interested and any candidates for baptism or confirmation at that time. The place will be announced next week.

Insurance.

To the Editors of the Charlevoix Sentinel.

I desire through the columns of your paper to express my hearty thanks for the prompt payment by the Firemen's Fund Insurance Co. of San Francisco, through A. Buttars, its agent at Charlevoix, for the damage done by fire to my house and its contents, on Dec. 28th, amount, $33.50.

Very respectfully,
WALTER MANNAY.

[illegible], Jan 11, 1886.

Religious.

Services at the M. E. church during the week and on the Sabbath.

Rev. J. H. McCartney of Atwood, will preach during the evenings of this week.

Young people's meeting at 6 o'clock.

Preaching at Black's school house next Sabbath at 2:30 p. m. by J. T. Iddings.

The M. E. Sabbath school has opened up with a good prospect for an earnest years work.

The Charlevoix Savings Bank.

Elsewhere will be found the annual financial statement of the Charlevoix Savings Bank. The exhibit shows a most satisfactory condition of affairs in the financial status of the concern. A comparison of this with the statement of Jan. 1, 1885 shows a marked increase of business, and a largely increased deposit that denotes growing confidence in the management. The concern is incorporated under the State law, and its stockholders and directors are among our leading business men.

A Surprise.

The usual semi-annual installation of officers occurred at Odd Fellows' hall on Wednesday evening last, and at 10 o'clock word was sent in from Opera Hall, adjoining, that the members' presence was desired there forthwith. When the members arrived there, with Noble Grand Gus Brown at their head, they found the ladies there, and a most bountifully spread table. Something more than an hour was spent in doing justice to the viands, and giving the ladies all sorts of taffy in numerous speeches. The occasion is said to have been a very enjoyable one for all concerned.

The Manufacturing Co.

At the annual meeting of the Charlevoix Manufacturing Co. held at the office of Hon. A. Buttars last Monday evening the following Directors were elected: M. J. Stockman, A. Buttars, F. J. Meech, S. M. See, H. Lee Iddings.

The Company have in consideration the purchase of new machinery that will enable them to run the entire year.

The Charlevoix Mfg Co. have a property of which the village may well feel proud. During the past year the Company transacted a business of between $13,000 and $14,000, paying out to their help for actual labor only, over $4,500. It would seem from this that it would be well for every one to do all they can to assist and encourage such an enterprise. Thus far it has not paid the stockholders a penny. It is the determination of the directors, if possible, to make the year 1886 a profitable one to the institution and stockholders as well as those employed by it.

Crossing the Straits on Ice.

The Cheboygan Tribune has the following concerning the record of winter travel on the Straits: "Seeing the item in a Detroit paper that S. Highstone, of Mackinaw Island, had said that last New Years day was the first he ever saw that he could not drive across the straits on ice, we have taken the trouble to consult the columns of the Tribune and see what their record showed. We find that Jan. 5th, 1876, the mail was still being carried from Mackinaw to Cheboygan in an open boat. Jan. 1877, the first passage across the straits on the ice for the winter was made by Alex Lalotte, the mail carrier, who came over with his pony and sleigh. In the winter of '77-'78, we find it recorded that Mr. Barr, keeper of the Cheboygan light, reported a steam barge passing down January 12th. Jan. 11, 1879, the record shows the straits not yet frozen over, but considerable frozen ice. The first crossing during the winter of '79-'80 was on Dec. 28, '79, by mail carrier from the Island. Winter of '80-'81 the first crossing was the latter part of December. The next winter it was the middle of January before a crossing was made. The winter of '82-'83 and '83-'84 we find no record. Last winter the first crossing was on Jan. 7th.

At Howell, last week, the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad folks and the D. L. & N. nearly came to an open and bloody battle, arising from the first named road crossing the line of the latter. The T. & A. A. brought 400 men to the ground with guns, to protect their construction gang. Several law suits will follow.

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL.
SMITH & PARMELEE, Editors and Proprietors.
CHARLEVOIX, : : MICHIGAN.

[illegible]

1861 and Horatio Seymour of 1868.

IT is related of the late General Toombs, of Georgia, that while a member of Jefferson Davis' Cabinet he rode to Libby Prison and had an interview with a boy prisoner from New England, whose release and safe conduct to the Union lines was ordered a few days later. The appeal of the boy's mother, who had once been Toombs' sweetheart, had not been made in vain.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT, of Erie, Pa., is said to be the richest man in the National House of Representatives. His wealth is estimated at $12,000,000, invested in railroads, oil lands, coal mines, etc. He was a page in the House when Webster, Clay and Calhoun were still active at Washington. Mr. Scott is a Democrat, is of medium size and about forty-five years of age.

IN the present Congress there are two Adamses, two Allens, a pair of Andersons, a brace of Breckenridges, a trio of Browns, a quartet of Campbells, two Davidsons, two Gibsons, two Greens, three Hendersons, two Joneses, two Johnsons and a Johnston, a pair of O'Neills, a Reed and a Red, two Stones and four Taylors. The Thomases go in pairs, and so do the Wards, the Weavers, the Warners and the Whites.

R. E. GOODELL, formerly of Illinois, now of Leadville, Col., confirms a recent report from Leadville that one of the carbonate mines in which James G. Blaine, ex-Senator Chaffee and others are interested at Leadville has begun to pan out rich. He states that they had laid out a great deal of money on the mine, and that it is only recently, when they struck a second vein, that good results have been obtained.

THE Grants are living quietly in the old home in Sixty-sixth street, New York. Colonel Frederick and Jesse R. are engaged in bringing out the second volume of the General's memoirs. U. S. Grant, who is generally known as "Buck," because he was born in the Buckeye State, stays on his farm near Purdy's Station, in Westchester County, N. Y., most of the time. Mrs. Grant goes out seldom. She is not in good health.

THE Treasury Department at Washington on the 24th purchased 1,000,000 ounces of silver for coinage into standard dollars. The silver dollar was quoted at 79½ cents.

A GREAT gas vein was struck at Berea, O., on the 24th, after boring two years. The gas rushed out so vigorously that it ignited and set fire to the buildings.

THERE were 193 failures in the United States during the seven days ended on the 24th, against 217 in the preceding seven days. Total number during the year 10,[illegible], against 11,[illegible] in 1884.

THE postal and express employes of New York reported on the 24th greater demands upon them than during any previous holiday season.

ADVICES of the 24th say that during the recent storm twenty-two vessels were wrecked at or near Colon, on the Isthmus of Panama, and sixty lives were lost.

A BAND of Indians were surprised on the 24th while encamped near the railroad track between Clifton and Lordsburg, N. M., by a band of Mexican residents, and eleven of the savages were killed and thirty-two horses were captured.

REV. JOHN R. ELMORE, of Clayton, Ind., having been expelled from the pulpit for bigamy, cut a hole through the ice in the river on the 25th and drowned himself.

THE suggestion was made by the London Times on the 24th that the Irish puzzle could in ninety days be solved by excluding Parnellites from the House of Commons and proclaiming martial law in Ireland.

AT the Cook County Hospital, in Chicago, a bountiful dinner was served on the 25th to six hundred patients. An outbreak of fire, however, created a wild panic, and caused the destruction of the Christmas tree, with $200 worth of presents, many persons being severely burned.

S. R. STERLING, for fourteen years Treasurer of Rockingham County, Va., was on the 24th discovered to be short in his accounts between $50,000 and $60,000.

UP to the 25th seventy-five dead bodies of the miners who were imprisoned in a colliery in Wales had been recovered.

AT Austin, Tex., burglars on the night of the 24th entered the residence of James Phillips, robbed the house and murdered Mr. Phillips and his wife. The residence of Mr. Hamilton was also robbed and his wife killed. There was no clue to the guilty parties.

THE recent canvass of members of the British Parliament gives Gladstone an assured majority over any possible combination of Whigs and Tories.

THE house occupied by Patrick Driscoll, in New York City, was destroyed by fire early on the morning of the 25th, and two youths, aged seventeen and fourteen respectively, and a girl aged seven, perished in the flames. Mrs. Driscoll died in a hospital during the day.

CHURCH VS. STATE.

An Interesting Struggle in the Argentine Republic—Control of the Public Schools the Bone of Contention.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—A series of dispatches received by the Secretary of State from Thomas O. Osborn, United States Minister at Buenos Ayres, the last of which is dated October 18, 1885, describes an interesting episode in the nature of a struggle between church and State in the Argentine Republic for the control of the normal schools, a struggle which is the dominant issue in National politics and has absorbed much of the attention of the Government and the people.

In the normal schools of that republic, established and supported by the National Government, many Protestant teachers, mostly women from the United States, are employed. On the 25th of April, 1884, Dr. Clara, a Catholic ecclesiastic and the acting Bishop of Cordova, issued a pastoral letter prohibiting, among other things, the sending of Catholic children to school where Protestant teachers were employed. The National Government, considering it an act of disrespect and insubordination, took the matter up and, after the exchange of several notes between the Minister of Education, the Governor of the Province of Cordova and Dr. Clara, referred it to the Attorney-General for his opinion.

The Attorney-General, in a long report containing a full review of the relations of the State and church, gave the opinion that the Government which confirmed church nominations could discipline and dismiss. President Roca accepted this opinion as sound doctrine and issued a decree dismissing Dr. Clara. This was followed by a sharp discussion in the press and also in Congress, where a resolution was introduced calling for all the correspondence. Protests were made by the authorities of the church. Charges of priestly subversion were made on one side and of encroachment and of persecution by the civil authorities on the other. Notwithstanding the decree, Dr. Clara refused to accept his dismissal and continued to exercise the functions of his priestly office. He even issued a second pastoral, in which he asserted that it was his duty to obey instructions from Rome rather than the laws of the National Government.

The people of the Republic are now divided into two parties, clerical and anti-clerical. Congress passed a bill which had been introduced at the previous session, providing that in schools of the National capital there should be no sectarian test or teaching. In the discussion of the budget of the Minister of Education and Worship a hot debate took place on a section relating to the suppression of the seminaries for the education of priests, and Minister Dewil, who took part in the discussion, made it known that the President, by withholding supplies, was determined to press the question to the point of separation of church and State.

"It is quite probable," writes Mr. Osborn in his last dispatch, "that the President will send in a message asking Congress to approve a call for a convention to amend the Constitution, in order to relieve the State from the church."

One of the early incidents of the struggle was a procession of more than one thousand women of the first families of Buenos Ayres, which marched to the Senate and presented a petition, signed exclusively by women, praying for the rejection of a pending bill already passed by the lower house, which prohibited the teaching of religious dogmas in common schools. A vote was immediately taken and the bill was rejected by one vote.

ANOTHER MINE DISASTER.

Terrible Explosion in a Welsh Colliery—Seven Hundred Miners Buried in the Fatal Pit—Fifty Known to Have Been Killed, and Scores Terribly Burned—Efforts at Rescue.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—A dispatch from Ponty-Pridd, Wales, reports that a terrible colliery explosion occurred at the Ferndale pit, near there, yesterday afternoon, and that 400 miners are intombed. The explosion occurred in the upper of the two seams. There were 750 men in the mine at the time of the explosion. The majority of these were in the lower seam, otherwise the death-list would have been much larger. As it was at least fifty men were killed in the upper seam and scores were terribly burned. The injured were carried to places of safety by their more fortunate companions who had not been hurt.

Hastily equipped rescue parties are laboring in the pit for the relief of the buried colliers, and it is now hoped that the greater part of them may be taken out alive. The explosion was caused by fire damp, which was ignited from the lamp of a careless miner. The scenes at the mouth of the pit are said to be heart-rending—the throngs of women who crowd around the mine shrieking and wailing as the body of a husband or brother is brought up by the rescuers. The disaster is said to be the worst that has taken place in Wales for years.

The latest dispatches from the pit say that 320 men have been rescued. Seven are so fearfully burned that they may die.

PARNELL CAN'T COME.

The National Convention of Irish-Americans, to Be Held in Chicago, Postponed on Account of the Inability of the Irish Leader to Be Present.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 24.—Mr. Patrick Egan, President of the Irish National League of America, has received a cablegram from Hon. T. M. Harrington, M. P., Secretary of the National League in Ireland, in which he says that Mr. Parnell will not be able to attend the League Convention to be held in Chicago in January next, and that he is inclined to think it best to postpone the convention until after the meeting of Parliament in February. The convention is therefore postponed to a date to be determined upon hereafter by the Executive Committee of the American League and Mr. Parnell. Mr. Egan will call the National Committee of the American League together some day in January, by which time there may be information from Ireland enabling a definite date to be fixed for the convention.

"Troth, then, I do," said the woman. "Then go and pick them out yourself," he replied, pointing to a large basket of eggs. The woman did so, and picked out two dozen of the largest eggs in the basket.

LEFT TO THEIR FATE.

Failure of the Rescuing Party to Reach the Twenty-Three Imprisoned Miners in the Flooded Shaft at Nanticoke, Pa.—A Sister of Two of the Victims Dies of Excessive Grief—Two Miners Buried by Sliding Snow in Colorado.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Dec. 23.—There was no rest for Nanticoke Monday night. It is impossible to describe in words the consternation, the dismay, the agony which spread throughout the village when it was learned after midnight that all efforts to get the entombed miners out alive were abandoned. The town never saw such a sight as that witnessed from two to four o'clock yesterday morning. No one thought of rest. The whole population was on the streets discussing in the wildest manner the decision to abandon the efforts at rescue. Exclamations of despair, cries of agony and mutterings of discontent were heard on every corner and in almost every household. Relatives of the unfortunate victims were in the wildest agony of despair. Several were seized with convulsions. Fannie Sarver, sister of the two Sarver brothers, was prostrated with violent fits, and died in a few hours. Mrs. Kiveler, the old mother of the Kiveler brothers, was at death's door from weakness and the shock, and many other relatives and friends of victims were completely prostrated.

The officials in charge of the rescuing expedition were forced to abandon all work from the air shaft by several irresistible concussions. Investigations at an early hour this morning show that sand rock and culm had fallen to such an extent that the mine in which the imprisoned miners were, was now filled to the roof and that the men are dead and beyond all human help. A second cave-in took place during the night which was of very large proportions and the real extent of the damage can hardly be estimated, but it is great. This fall brought with it volumes of black damp and sulphurous gases which filled the mine and put a peremptory stop to all work.

The fate of the men in the slope is sealed, and the only thing that remains is to recover the bodies. Work was commenced yesterday clearing away the debris preparatory to beginning anew. The operations at the slope will be kept up. The most practical miners are of opinion that when the dead men are found it will be in their chambers. If they have been caught in the fall of sand and culm they will be found one by one as the excavation continues, and it may be two months before the last body is recovered. The project of sinking a shaft over the workings of the fatal slope has been abandoned. It would be necessary to go down 250 feet to reach the nearest gangway, and to do this would take three months or more. The company will continue to work on and clear the obstructed tunnel.

The loss to the company is estimated at $150,000, and will be increased by the clearing away of a mile of debris, sand and rock which is wedged in a solid mass in the gangways.

The following is a complete and correct list of the victims as obtained for the first time:

Thomas Clifford, 10 years; William Dehaney, driver boy, 14 years; Willison Eckel, runner, 18 years; Edward [illegible], miner, 21 years; John Hawk, laborer, 32 years; Watkins Jelgoskinski, laborer, 23 years; Oliver Kiveler, miner, 25 years, married, three children; William Kiveler, laborer, 17 years; Frank Kiveler, miner, 23 years, married; Mans Longofski, driver, aged 17; Abram Lewis, miner, 4[illegible] years, married; Andrew Lowe, miner, 25 years, married; Vincent Luke, laborer, 28 years, married; Edward Matthews, laborer, 20 years; August Mattule, miner, married, six children; Peter Matthewsky, laborer, age unknown; Joseph McCarty, miner, aged 23, married; John Zemach, laborer, 22 years; Abram Bublinski, laborer, 22 years; Isaac Sarver, miner, 28 years, married, two children; John Sarver, laborer, 21 years; John Smith, miner, 2[illegible] years, married; Thomas Williams, laborer, 21 years.

BURIED IN A SNOW-CHOKED MINE.

SILVERTON, Col., Dec. 22.—A snow-slide came down the mountain into Minnesota gulch yesterday afternoon, sweeping everything before it. The slide struck the mouth of the Prodigal Son mine, filling the eighty-five foot shaft and burying Burk Hovey and J. M. Scales, who were working at the bottom at the time of the accident. The snow was soon packed in so tightly that it was impossible to move the bucket, which went to the bottom when struck by the snow. A rescuing party is now at work, but all hope of reaching the imprisoned men alive has been abandoned.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

Sharp Advance in the Rates—Gold to Be Shipped to England.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—The absorbing topic of interest in Wall street has been the advance in the rates of foreign exchange, the quotation for demand sterling bills reaching the point at which shipments can be made at a profit—490½ for posted rates and 489½ for actual business. There was an engagement for $100,000 gold yesterday afternoon for shipment on Saturday, and it is generally believed that further shipments will be made. The immediate cause for this advance has been the advance in the Bank of England rate of discount last week, but a more direct and potential cause is to be found in the extremely light shipments of grain to Europe, especially wheat, while the visible supply of wheat in this country is far in excess of previous years.

A break in the price of wheat, it is generally conceded, would lead to the substitution of wheat for gold in the future settlement of our trade balances with Europe.

Senator Van Wyck's Oklahoma Bill.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The bill introduced in the Senate Tuesday by Senator Van Wyck to extend territorial jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, includes in its provisions Oklahoma and "No Man's Land," the small tract north of the Texas Panhandle, and provides that the lands in the two latter localities shall not be occupied through pre-emption or commutation, but subject only to the homestead settlements. It further provides that a commission, composed of two army officers and three officials of the Indian and Land Bureaus shall award a sufficiency of lands to the Indians in severalty and negotiate with the interested tribes for the sale of the remainder to the Government to become part of the public domain. It furthermore contemplates a repeal of the grant of lands through the Indian Territory to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad, annuls all existing leases, except for the actual cultivation of the soil, and fixes the legal rate of interest at six per cent. The bill likewise provides for the appointment of the usual territorial officers.

He Fell Dead from Horror.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Joseph Walsh, a laborer, aged fifty years, stumbled into the Brooklyn sugar works yesterday afternoon, and was watching the machinery, when he fell backward into a large circular cutting mill and was literally chopped to pieces. None of the men employed in the sugar house seemed to relish the task of removing his mangled body. Frederick Bird, forty-five years of age, finally undertook it. He succeeded in taking them from among the knives out onto the dock, where they were covered with a blanket. Bird started back to the sugar house, his face as pale as a sheet and great beads of perspiration standing on his forehead. The sight had completely unnerved him, and he dropped dead from heart disease.

Robbed of $4,000 by a Burglar.

CLINTON, Wis., Dec. 23.—William Graham, a bachelor, living five miles south of here, was confronted by a pistol held by a masked man, Monday night, and compelled to surrender $4,000, which he had in his house. Henry Lawson, a neighbor, has been arrested accused of the robbery. Lawson was formerly a member of the Cincinnati Base-Ball Club. A search was made of his father's premises yesterday morning, and it was found that a considerable portion of the money had been placed in the stove. Nothing but the ashes remained. Fourteen hundred and twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents of the amount was in gold and was recovered. This was found where he had secreted it in the barn.

SLAVERY IN BRAZIL.

Efforts to Entirely Break Up the Traffic in Human Flesh Without Avail—History of the Emancipation Movement—Dom Pedro Calls the Attention of Parliament to the Matter.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—Among the diplomatic dispatches recently sent to Congress by the President is one from Charles B. Trail, Secretary of the Legation at Rio de Janeiro, giving a brief history of the emancipation movement in Brazil and a statement of the present aspect of the slavery question there. A law was passed, he says, in 1831, which declared free all negroes and their children who should be imported into the Empire after that date, but this law was never executed, and in spite of it the slave trade increased, reaching, prior to 1851, enormous proportions. Fifty thousand negro slaves were imported in a single year when the trade was at its height. The effective intervention of the British Government in 1851 broke up the foreign trade, and from that time the friends of the slaves in Brazil were able to make some headway against their opponents.

In 1871 the Abolitionists secured the passage of a law declaring the children born of slave mothers after that date should be free, and providing for the reimbursement of the masters at a certain rate; also that there should be annually freed in every province of the Empire as many slaves as should correspond to the quota allotted to each province out of the fund destined for that purpose. The emancipation fund was derived from a tax on slaves, subscriptions and legacies, six annual lotteries, fines from the violation of this law, etc., and is in control of the Judge of the Orphan's Court in each province. It was hoped that the slave-owners would quietly acquiesce, but the hope was fallacious. The registry of slaves, which the law required, showed that very few children were born to slave mothers immediately after the passage of the law, while the record of births for the preceding year was enormous. This proved the extensive and almost universal falsification of the records. In other respects the provisions of this law were successfully evaded.

In 1881 it was estimated that every sixth person throughout the empire was a slave. The Abolitionists continued to gain in numbers after the passage of the law of 1871, and for a few years they directed their efforts to the enfranchisement of a single parish in the province of Ceara, which was accomplished. Parish after parish in this province was thus attacked and conquered, and on March 25, 1884, the enfranchisement of the last parish in the province was publicly celebrated. When the work was begun in 1878 the province contained 33,000 slaves. In 1881 the number had been reduced to 20,000. The plan of operation of the Abolitionists seems to have been first to depreciate the value of slave property by a system of mild boycotting, and then to buy and manumit the slaves. The boycotting seems to have been very successful, as the price first paid by the Abolition societies for a slave was 137 milreis, and the price last paid was only 85 milreis, or $37.

Ceara was, however, a grazing province and was much more susceptible to abolition influences than the coffee-producing provinces, which still remain to be conquered. The slave population of Ceara was about one to twenty of its freemen. In Rio there are 490,000 slaves to 290,000 freemen, while in Sao Paulo the slaves outnumber the whites four to one. The Abolitionists are now demanding the unconditional and immediate freedom of the slaves. The Emperor said on the opening of the present Parliament:

A Government bill asking you to pass measures in regard to the slaves is awaiting your decision. This is a grave matter * * * The Government advises the execution of the law of 1871, now twelve years after its passage, as a means of extricating itself from this "grave matter." It is indeed a grave matter for this country. Assassinations of masters and overseers by slaves, followed by the most terrible revenge, are becoming more and more frequent. Brazil is bidding for immigrants to open up her wonderful resources, but immigrants are not to be found who are willing to offer their labor in competition with that of slaves. Her finances are a source of increasing uneasiness, but every one knows that the worst has not been reached yet, which will come on that day when the country finds her industries totally paralyzed through the want of labor, her slaves having acquired their freedom either by some legal enactment or as the result of a servile insurrection. After she is freed of this terrible incubus, starting anew with the principles that underlie all civilized nations, she ought soon to attain that rank among the powers of the globe for which nature has evidently destined her.

THE FATHERLAND.

The Growth of Population in Germany Exceeds That of Any of the Neighboring Powers—Successful Operation of the Scheme for Colonizing the Tramps.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—Mr. Frederick Raine, the American Consul-General at Berlin, in his annual report says that the population of the area now comprised in the German Empire, which was 24,831,000 in 1816, had increased to 42,234,000 in 1880, and at the present rate of increase it doubles once in forty-seven years. This is in excess of the growth of population in any of the neighboring Powers. Great Britain, Mr. Raine says, doubles her population in fifty-one years; the Netherlands in fifty-two years; Denmark in fifty-four years; Austria in sixty and one-half years, and Belgium in sixty-one years; while France requires two hundred years. The immigration from the empire shows a steady and marked decrease since 1881, from which fact Mr. Raine argues that either the economical condition of Germany has improved; the attractive force of America has decreased, or Bismarck's colonial policy is proving successful. This policy is meeting with universal approval throughout the empire.

Mr. Raine describes another colonial enterprise of a novel character which is now in successful operation. Three or four years ago, he says, several hundred thousand tramps infested Germany and drew from the people many millions annually bestowed on charity. A clergyman first suggested the plan of colonizing these people, and with the aid of men of wealth, secured tracts of waste or partly cultivated land in Westphalia, where he organized "a workmen's colony." Local committees were everywhere formed to counsel the withholding of alms and the bestowal of an equivalent sum to the new colonial enterprise. The plan worked well, and tramps were compelled to emigrate to the colony in large numbers. There they were washed, provided with clothing and furnished with employment as farm laborers. Gradually, in the progress of colonization, they found work at their respective trades, and many of them became useful members of society.

How Congress Stands on Silver Coinage.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—The National Republican gives as the result of an exhaustive inquiry concerning the future decisions in the House of Representatives in regard to the unlimited suspension of silver coinage a table showing that 143 Democrats and 52 Republicans are against suspension and 30 Democrats and 91 Republicans in favor of it. The noticeable feature in connection with the matter is the division of the members upon sectional lines. The West and South are practically a unit for coinage, while the East and Middle States appear to be almost as solidly in favor of suspension.

Whisky and Beer Men in Opposition.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby is credited with having stirred up a gigantic and bitter fight between the whisky men on one side and the beer men on the other throughout the State, the first organized signs of which are expected to appear early next week. The Crosby plan is a high license, $1,000 per year for whisky and kindred liquors and $200 a year for beers and ales. The brewers have taken measures to force this scheme at the coming session of the Legislature, and will present a law for passage modeled after the Harper bill in Illinois, thus seeking to exterminate a vast number of the whisky saloons in this city.

A CHURCH RIOT.

The Trouble in the Polish Catholic Church at Detroit Breaks Out Afresh on Christmas Day—The Church Edifice and the Bishop's Residence Besieged by a Mob—A Fight Between the Rioters and Police in Which One Man is Killed.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 26.—Another outbreak among the Polish parishioners of St. Albertus' Catholic Church occurred yesterday shortly after morning mass. More than four thousand people, about one-third of the congregation, were gathered outside the church discussing the report that Bishop Borgess had promised to be present, open the church and settle all the troubles by giving back to the people their old pastor, Father Kolasinski. The Bishop did not appear, and the vast crowd marched to his residence. A committee was selected to notify him of the congregation's desires, but the inmates refused to admit the committee. The Bishop escaped by the rear of his house.

When the people learned of the Bishop's flight they became violent, and in a threatening manner proceeded to St. Joseph's Church, where they supposed the prelate was hiding. The police appeared at that moment, followed by another vast delegation of angry Poles. The latter joined their friends and proceeded, 6,000 strong, to the church.

When St. Joseph's was reached a rush was made for the door, but it was found locked. A large man, with a commanding voice, suddenly appeared among the people, and in the Polish tongue counseled quiet. About half of the crowd proceeded homeward, while the others returned to St. Albertus' Church, where, at three o'clock, a great mob made a sudden and savage attack upon the edifice. A large detail of police reinforcing the officers at the church, they resisted the assault and dispersed the rioters.

The Poles again gathered at the house of Basil Lemkie, on St. Aubin avenue. Lemkie, at the beginning of the church troubles, incensed the adherents of Father Kolasinski. His house was fiercely attacked. Men and women commingled and fought indiscriminately. A detachment swooped down on the mob, and the patrol wagons were soon loaded with prisoners. A large number of the rioters were seriously hurt. Some of the men had pistols and attempted to make a stand. John Leodowski, one of the principal rioters, was shot dead. The sight of the police and the killing of Leodowski subdued the mob, and it was again broken up by the police. A renewal of the riot is expected this morning, and one hundred armed policemen have been ordered to the neighborhood.

FEAST OF THE FLAMES.

A Christmas Tree Takes Fire at the County Hospital in Chicago—A Panic Ensues—Narrow Escape from Serious Injury of All Present—Many Receive Slight Burns.

CHICAGO, Dec. 26.—An accident that stopped just short of being an appalling catastrophe happened at the Cook County Hospital yesterday afternoon. An especial effort had been made to entertain the patients. A substantial Christmas dinner had been served to them, and the festivities of the day were to have been closed by a distribution of gifts. A mammoth Christmas tree had been set up in the middle of the amphitheater. The distribution had hardly begun when suddenly the tinder like tree burst out into a great cone-shaped flame. A wild panic and a frantic stampede at once ensued, amid shrieks and cries of "Fire!" Visitors, cripples and patients rushed up the steep steps of the amphitheater, and in the mad struggle for escape it is a miracle that no one was trampled upon. The smoke, the cries, the flames and the crackling tree combined to make a scene of mad tumult. As the tree burned the heat rose, and those who had crowded into the upper tiers of the amphitheater were the most severely scorched. A patient in Ward 1 jumped from a window upon a roof below and broke two of his fingers. A woman and a child jumped from another window to the ground.

Two of the women who jumped from a window to the ground, a distance of about twenty-five feet, injured their backs, although they fell on mattresses. It is not known yet whether their spines were affected or not. Over ninety persons were either scorched, bruised or singed.

THREE CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—Fire started at an early hour yesterday morning in a two-story frame dwelling on One Hundred and Sixty-sixth street, near Kingsbridge Road, which was owned by Daniel Phelan and occupied by Patrick Driscoll and his family. The occupants were in bed. Patrick Driscoll found his way out and gave an alarm. When the firemen reached the scene the building was in flames. Soon after the entire structure was consumed. Mr. Driscoll, his wife Mary, and a son named Patrick were seriously burned while escaping. Three children—John, Julius and Mary, aged respectively seventeen, fourteen and seven years—were burned to death.

THREE BRUTAL MURDERS.

Two Women and a Man Butchered by Robbers in Texas.

AUSTIN, Tex., Dec. 26.—Shortly before twelve o'clock Thursday night City Marshal Lucy was notified that the house of Mr. Hamilton, in the southeastern part of the city, had been robbed and Mrs. Hamilton murdered. The Marshal found the woman dying of two terrible gashes in the head, made by an axe. While he was looking about the premises he was notified that the residence of James Phillips, a wealthy architect and builder, had been entered and a butchery committed.

James Phillips, Jr., and his wife live with the elder Phillips. At midnight young Phillips was awakened by his father's voice calling for help. He responded at once, and found his father dying of ghastly axe wounds on the head, the bloody axe lying on the pillow beside him, while a little child sleeping in the same bed was unharmed, but splashed with blood and brains. Mrs. Phillips was found murdered in the rear yard. The body was nude and still warm. It is thought that Mrs. Phillips was awakened by the assault on her husband and was seized by the assassins, and that she was still alive when dragged into the yard. The police are dazed and have not the slightest clew to the guilty parties.

Cured by Telegraph.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—Prompt treatment being required at Big Indian, N. Y., on Saturday in the case of Miss Ora Misnor, aged twenty-one years, a farmer's daughter who took an ounce of laudanum with an intent to commit suicide, a physician was telegraphed for. A telegraph operator in this city who is a medical graduate "caught on" to the dispatch as it was being transmitted over the wires, and immediately telegraphed a remedy. His advice was so promptly acted upon that when the family physician arrived he admitted that the New York doctor had saved the girl's life. Yesterday she was out of immediate danger.

Competition in the Steel-Rail Trade.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 25.—The Age of Steel announces that the Western Steel Company, lessees of the Vulcan Steel Works of this city, which has been running for four months past on a product of steel slabs, billets and blooms, have determined to start the rail mill as soon as possible. This will be the only steel-rail mill outside of the combination formed to limit the products, and their presence in the market unrestricted will make trade lively in the West. The same paper states that the plan for the reorganization of the St. Louis Ore & Steel Company is likely to be successfully consummated within the next ninety days. This will take the property out of the hands of the receiver.

ON THE SHORE.

A New Year's Poem.

I stood upon the beach one day,
The waves were breaking at my feet,
And, in their gentle, ceaseless play,
They made a murmur, soft and sweet.

I looked across the bay, and lo,
Forth issuing from the city's heart,
I saw a vessel proudly go
To seek a foreign, distant mart.

I watched her as she sailed along,
I marked the low, dark line of smoke,
Which told me that her engine strong
Was pushing onward, stroke by stroke.

I followed her with eagle eye,
Until, at length, there seemed to be
A blending of the sea and sky,
Which hid her stately form from me.

And then I sat me down and thought
Of all that vessel inly bore,
The wealth, the jewels deftly wrought,
The merchandise, the goodly store

Of all that men might need or crave
To give them comfort or delight;
But as I pondered on the wave
And on the tempest in its might,

And on that vessel all alone
Out there upon the countless sea,
Its fate to all, save God, unknown,
Who only seeth what shall be,

I thought more of the human life
Adrift upon that ocean wide,
Exposed to all the wind's wild strife,
And all the perils of the tide.

I thought of bosoms swelling high
With buoyant hopes of days to come,
Of travels 'neath a sunny sky,
Of glad return to friends and home.

I thought of men whose eager minds
Were all intent on gaining wealth;
Of women seeking what one finds
So rarely when once lost, their health.

I thought of all that might have led
Those who embarked to brave the flood;
Of expectations that had sped
With greater zeal the coursing blood.

I knew not what should be; God knew.
I only saw a lonely bark
Pass from the landman's eager view,
Out o'er the ocean wild and dark.

I could but offer up a prayer
To Him who rules the wind and wave,
That He, with all a Father's care,
And all Jehovah's power to save,

Would guard those who that night had past
Out from my sight, that by His arm,
They might be shielded from the blast,
And kept from every breath of harm.

Again I stand upon the shore,
Shore of a widely different sea;
And now I hear the billows roar,
The billows of eternity.

I see not one, but many a bark
Out o'er the ocean gently glide;
Out o'er the ocean wild and dark,
To brave the perils of its tide.

And once again my prayers ascend
For all who on that ocean roam,
That God may be their guide, their Friend,
And bring them to Himself at home.

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

Why a Young Man Was Presented With One.

Argyle Meriweather had two lovers. One was an old familiar friend, no other than her first cousin, Sam Meriweather, who had been—although a few years her senior—her playmate, and for a time her school-fellow, always ready to tease her himself, but quite as ready to come to her aid if anybody else did. He seemed to look upon her in the light of a possession, which he had a right to have his own way with, but was equally bound to protect. So it was with great surprise that as they grew older and Argyle bloomed suddenly into a lovely girl of sixteen, with hair of genuine gold and eyes of bewitching gray, she found, after a slight contest with Sam in which she had expected of course to have to give up as before, that Sam was very willing to succumb completely to her will, feeling himself amply rewarded if she smiled upon him or praised him. As soon as she began to realize this unexpected change of affairs—being like most girls of her age a little tyrant—she seized the reins and kept them—not always out of sight. Her second surprise was to find that there were some things which even she could not make Sam do—for which, with true feminine inconsistency, she liked him twice as well as for the many things in which he yielded to her.

When Sam declared himself her lover, she feigned a pretty astonishment, and said "No" positively, but would have relented—so grievously did she miss him during the two weeks that Sam staid away, had not—unfortunately for Sam—her second lover appeared on the scene and engrossed all her leisure time and attention. This was a stranger, an officer in the army, and his name was Clarence Dupont, from Thibodeaux Parish, La. He came to the neighborhood on a furlough obtained by a slight wound in his arm, and brought a letter of introduction to her father from his uncle, an old friend and classmate of Mr. Meriweather's. After his first call, he came frequently, for he was staying with friends who lived at the distance of a few miles only, and the ride and talk with his pretty young hostess was an agreeable enough divertisement for a summer day. He began, of course, by making love, as a courtesy due to the sex, but soon fell head over ears in love, after his ardent Southern fashion, and conducted his wooing after a style very different from poor Sam's slow and earnest way. He was very jealous, and in complete despair, or very ecstatic, and on the point of announcing a betrothal to all his acquaintances; and Argyle, who had never given a serious thought to marrying this new admirer, found it equally hard to restrain his hopes and his fears. When at last he would have a final decision, and received a negative one, he took his departure in the depths of gloom, bringing tears of self-reproach to Argyle's beautiful eyes and filling her tender heart with alarm by threats of suicide, and hints of a speedy death on the bloody battle-field.

Argyle was very young, and she was much troubled about it, and wished that Sam had not been so foolish himself—it would have been such a comfort to have him reason and laugh her out of her fears, or even scold her for her selfishness in amusing herself at the expense of another's pain.

"I will never be so wicked again," sighed Argyle, and she went off to get her father's shirts to mend—the mending had been accumulating during the last few weeks—as a proof of her genuine and profound repentance. She persevered in her course of amendment, as illustrated by attention to darning and repairing everything she could lay her hands on, for the next fortnight, and I regret to own that she found it uncommonly dull, and there were moments when she would have relapsed into former iniquities had not both her lovers been safely out of her reach, and a long rainy spell kept others from calling.

At last there came bright, beautiful weather in the early autumn. Mr. Meriweather was reading his morning paper. This was always a lengthy occupation, consisting of an absorbed perusal of the editorial columns, a business-like investigation of extracts from other papers, and letters of correspondents, and at the last a by no means indifferent review of the advertisements.

Argyle, who had presided at the head of his table ever since she had been left a motherless child of ten years old, and poured out his coffee for him, watched his proceedings this morning with an interest quite new in her pretty ladyship. Usually she professed a supreme indifference to the newspapers and their contents, and if she did not receive an azure or rose-tinted missive of daintiest size from one of her own correspondents—which was a rare occurrence—as she was herself incorrigibly lazy about answering her letters, her occupations, after finishing her own breakfast, consisted in feeding the two brown setters, Dash and Dare, and gathering flowers to arrange in the sitting-room. It was a very lax household in its ways, but Argyle, to do her justice, was fond of early rising, and enjoyed the fresh cool air of dawn, and the run in the garden for the fruits for the breakfast, which was the meal her father preferred above all others, while the dew was still fresh upon them. She had generally aired and dusted both rooms; superintended the making of the coffee and the preparation of some appetizing little side dish, Mr. Meriweather being decidedly an epicure, and had eaten her own simpler meal before her father appeared.

He was the most absent-minded and unobservant of men, but this morning even his attention seemed to be awakened by Argyle's remaining at the table, and by her rather uneasy glance toward his paper. He pushed up his gold spectacles and looked at her with an amused smile.

"Well, Argyle, are you expecting any special news from the papers to-day?"

"Ye-es—no, papa, no news specially to-day," she answered, hesitating and blushing a little under her father's amused scrutiny.

"Perhaps you would like to hear the results of the last English elections?" in a sarcastic tone.

"No, thank you, papa."

"Or the present value of gold on Wall street?"

"Oh, no, papa, indeed, I would much rather not," with an expression of such unfeigned horror that Mr. Meriweather, with an amused laugh, turned again to the last paragraph of an editorial column. As he turned over the page, he uttered an exclamation. "Argyle!" he said, in a brisker tone than usual, as he looked up from the sheet, "by the way, I have found an item that may interest you."

"What is it, papa?" quickly.

"Some news about one of your acquaintances," laying down the paper, "that young officer from Louisiana—Du—Du—I forget his name. I found him very dull company, but I remember you seemed to think him rather entertaining."

"Dupont was his name, papa," answered Argyle—after nervously intent upon pulling out the fringe of her red fruit napkin. "But isn't his name mentioned in the paper? Didn't you say there was an item about him?"

"Yes, of course," replied the old gentleman, in a somewhat guilty tone, as he searched the columns of his open page diligently. "I am afraid I am a little absent-minded, Argyle—that is, about trifles. Yes, my dear, you are right, of course, his name must have been mentioned."

Argyle waited with ill-concealed impatience while her father slowly and deliberately read aloud the heading of each separate paragraph: 'A Letter From Albemarle County,' 'Account of Grand Military Review in Richmond,' 'Discovery'—no, that's not it. 'Murder or Suicide of a Stranger.'"

"Oh, papa, that is too horrible!" exclaimed the young girl, the tears rising to her eyes and her cheeks growing suddenly pale. "He was so gay and full of spirits—I can not bear to think of such a fate"—and her tears began to fall quickly.

"Why, my love, what's the matter?" ejaculated her father, looking up in astonishment. "Or were you only jesting about his sad fate? There is nothing here about Dupont except a description of his wedding, and, by the way, it seems to have been a very brilliant and fashionable affair."

"His wedding!" repeated Argyle, in a tone of inexpressible surprise, and then as the truth slowly dawned on her in all its ludicrousness—for having failed to receive one of Captain Dupont's ardent and gloomy epistles for the last three weeks, she had been haunted by fears for his safety—she broke into a silvery peal of laughter.

"Dear papa, how you did alarm me! you read the 'Suicide of a stranger' so impressively—as if that were the very item you were looking for. And so Captain Dupont is really married!" laughing again with such an abandon of mirth and amusement that her father, bewildered by her rapid transition from tears to gaity, remarked rather crossly:

"My love, you seem to find the young man's marriage very comical; now, I can not assert that I was very intimately acquainted with him—he always appeared to be rather diffident about conversing with me—but from even my slight acquaintance I should judge he was just the kind of young man to take a foolish interest in such things."

"Oh, papa, papa!" exclaimed Argyle, leaning back in her chair, and laughing again, "you may be very learned and wise about English politics and German literature—but you don't know the least bit about what is going on under your very eyes! Yes, papa, I think he was rather foolish about such things, and his marriage wouldn't have surprised me at all—except that I was expecting to hear something else—quite different."

"It is precisely what I would have expected," remarked her father, severely, for he did not enjoy being laughed at; and Argyle, catching a glimpse of the cook's resigned air, as she waited at the half-open door for orders about dinner, caught up her tiny key-basket with a not unmusical little jingle of its keys, and left the table, dropping a light kiss on her father's forehead as she passed by him.

But though Argyle's mind was relieved in regard to Captain Dupont, another much more serious trouble arose in its place. Her father owed a great deal of money, and had mortgaged the homestead heavily. The interest on this mortgage had not been paid for several years, and Mr. Meriweather sank into a deep depression whenever a letter from his creditor—now beginning to threaten a foreclosure—arrived. It made him more fretful for several days, and gave a bitter flavor to his remarks about some of his more prosperous relatives, but it did not occur to him that he could do anything to prevent their being left homeless and penniless. Nor did it occur to Argyle either, though she thought of many plans for herself—of taking in sewing, of trying to get a few scholars among her neighbors' children—only feeling that it would be quite impossible to do or undertake anything which would necessitate her going away from her father, and leaving him without any one to attend to the little things on which his daily comfort so largely depended. Summer with its long joyous days seemed to have been left a great distance behind, as the weeks went on bringing short dark days of colder weather, and she tried to economize in their fuel and food and clothing, and to devise something she could sell instead of having the row of purchases grow longer and longer every week.

Of course she made little headway. Her experience was very small, and Aunt Dilsey, the cook, like most negroes, had an invincible dislike to economy, and could not understand there was any real need for it with "her ole marster's folks." "Jes' one dat chile's whims!" she grumbled to herself—for though she was perfectly devoted to Argyle, she could never realize that she had grown beyond childhood.

So Argyle's efforts were generally baffled by: "Now, honey, yo' know dere ain't nebber been any anti-moisture 'twixt yo' folks an' dere neighbors, an' we'se got to receive dem all with 'coming hostility. Needn't talk to me, chile, 'bout indignant circumstances! Yo' is young, an' yo' mus'n't sturb yo'self. Leave it all to Dilsey—she'll 'vide yo' wid a dinner dat old marster kin eat—yo' see now!"

But Aunt Dilsey, willing as her heart was, and broad as were her shoulders, made a very ineffectual dyke against the threatening flood.

"It is all over," said Mr. Meriweather, feebly, as he came in from the Post-office the last evening of December, and drawing his chair close to the small fire, tried to warm his cold hands. "Argyle, my poor child, we will have to leave our home next month."

"Papa!" cried Argyle—she had expected the blow a long time, yet it seemed to her when it actually came, as if it had been a surprise. After what seemed to her an endless interval, she asked, doubtfully: "Papa, where are we going then?"

"I don't know," he replied, with a mixture of resentment and fretful perplexity in his tone, which at once brought Argyle to his side to caress, and comfort him with vague words of hope and cheer that sounded woefully hollow to her own sinking heart.

"It is very strange," at last observed her father, querulously, "that it has been five months since your cousin Sam has entered the house. He used to be a frequent visitor—in and out of the house like my own son—but now I suppose he is like other fair-weather friends and fears being called upon to help us in adversity."

"Oh, no, papa, I don't think that would keep Sam away. Besides, you know, he is with his regiment, and may not have been able to get leave of absence."

"He has been at home for the Christmas holidays," replied her father, shortly. "Tom Chadwick met him the day he arrived a week ago."

Argyle did not reply.

"Has he written you one line?" asked her father.

"No," answered Argyle, feebly, "but I don't believe Sam has forgotten"—she was interrupted by a brisk knock at the door.

"Come in," called Mr. Meriweather, and Argyle stole a little farther back into the shadow of the door, intending to make her escape unnoticed. She had burned the front breadth of her alpaca and torn the sleeve, in her efforts to restrain Aunt Dilsey's culinary extravagance, and her hair had tumbled down in a confusion of curls from its coil.

Sam's cheery voice replied, and the familiar comfort of the sound brought a throb of delight to Argyle's heart.

"Are you all by yourself, Uncle James? I have been trying hard to get a bit of business done, in order that I might get here in time to wish you a Happy New Year, and give you some proof I had remembered you. You must let me have the pleasure of it in my own way, uncle," he said affectionately. Then he poked the embers into a bright blaze, and added eagerly: "Where is Argyle?"

"Why, she was here only a few minutes ago," said her father, looking around uncertainly.

"Well, never mind," said Sam, but his voice sounded so disappointed that Argyle would have stepped forward—burnt breadth, sleeve and all—if he had not added: "The fact is, I came here specially to see you to-night."

"I am glad you remembered us," said his uncle, a little stiffly. "It has been a very painful year to us, and few of our friends have tried to make it brighter. Of course you know we shall have to leave our old home next month?"

"No, you will not, uncle," replied Sam, handing over a bundle of papers. "There's your bond, which I secured myself by purchase from your auditor—and you won't mind, uncle, that I have secured the old place in Argyle's name instead of yours? I thought it would prevent it from being sold any more and would be best for both," and he paused a little anxiously, to see how his uncle would regard this arrangement.

"My dear boy," his uncle began, in his old pompous manner, but quickly broke down into natural tears of relief and gratitude. "This is more than I deserved—I have been a very selfish old man. I have not thought enough of other people's troubles—of my daughter—and I have misjudged my friends and thought them selfish. Sam, this will be a lesson to me in human goodness," and he grasped the young man's hand warmly.

"Oh, uncle," said Sam, overwhelmed, "I am so glad you like it," and in his haste to escape from his uncle's thanks and praise, he bade him good-night most incoherently, and precipitately retreated.

But he was mistaken in thinking the way was clear, for a little figure stole after him, and a very low but a very sweet voice said: "Sam," arresting his flight abruptly on the steps, and then Argyle's hand stole into his.

"You thought you could steal away without my saying a word? Oh, you naughty boy!" said Argyle, reproachfully.

"Argyle—I didn't want you to know. I was afraid you might think I was going to trouble you again," and he broke down rather incoherently a second time, not being endowed with so great a talent for words as for deeds.

"But you won't?" asked Argyle, very sweetly, her hand still in his.

"No; I wouldn't take such an advantage of your kindness. I will never love you any less, but I won't worry you, dear. You must not be afraid of my ever speaking of my love again," and poor Sam forgot that he was at that moment breaking the very promise he was making.

"Well, Sam, if you really won't ask me for a gift for the New Year, I shall have to give it without the asking. Will you take it?" shyly.

Sam was not too blind to see the meaning, and as the sweet face hid itself against his shoulder, Argyle herself was taken as a gift for a New Year, and a new life, together, through shadow and sun, and "all the changes and chances" of this mortal life.—Ella F. Mosby, in Springfield Republican.

FALLING STARS.

Recollections of a Wonderful Night in the Year 1833.

I have read many descriptions of what was called the falling stars or meteoric shower of 1833. I do not call myself old, yet I was five years of age when the event alluded to occurred, and witnessed it as I remember without fear. The impress is still fresh on my mind, though I have never read a description that agrees with what I saw, except when spoken of as sublimely grand. I will try to describe it as seen by me in Beaufort District, South Carolina—one hundred and fifty miles up the Savannah River, and about six miles from Matthew's Bluff. At the residence of my aunt, at some hour before day (the date I do not remember), Uncle Fred came to my bed, took me in his arms to the front piazza, where he stood me on my feet to witness the rain of apparent liquid fire. I had no fear, for he was with me, and I had no appreciation of the terror it might have for those who dreaded the judgment.

It was a rain of fire, not stars. The stars, or sparks, only occurred at the end of the lines of fire. Imagine a rain of molten iron striking the earth, each drop bursting into sparks. Nothing else will compare. I could not describe it, if experience with foundry and smith's shops had not afforded the comparison. The fire fell in streams like the heaviest fire rain I ever witnessed, and swayed to and fro, just as the water is by the motion of the clouds or wind. The only stars I saw were just such as one sees when molten iron is running into or from the ladle, or when iron with a welding heat is withdrawn from the forge, or such as seen when the liquid metal drops upon earth, or such as seen in the wake of an exploded rocket. The strangest feature to me was no such sparks or stars appeared except at the end of the line of fire rain, which stopped about five feet from the earth, as near as I can judge. The piazza had three steps from the ground. It could not have been more than three feet high, and the line of fire rain burst into sparks on a level with my eyes. None that I saw struck the earth, but after sparkling on this line disappeared, to be succeeded by others in quick succession. I recollect distinctly observing the scene around the yard, and the road led directly from the gate, and wondering why none of the fire or sparks reached the earth. It was not as light as day, but a lurid light greater than I have ever seen since. Objects were perfectly discernable, though not so well as by daylight. I heard of many persons being terrified but saw none. I do not recollect seeing anything above the line of my vision—such as the tops of trees and houses. The fire rain was too thick to see through. After staying as long as was deemed prudent in my night clothes my uncle returned me to bed. How long it was before daylight I do not know. I do know I slept until called to breakfast. I met an old gentleman some years ago who was in camp on the Texas prairies, who witnessed the meteoric shower or falling stars and whose account tallied more nearly with mine than any I have ever read or heard. He did not have my experience with molten metal, but when he heard my comparisons with the sparks from a smith's forge heartily indorsed me.—Cor. Blackshear (Ga.) Georgian.

SOUTHERN TEXAS.

A Glance at the Wilderness in a New Country.

The progress of civilization has sadly reduced the Robin Hood romance of the good old times when every wood was a hunting ground; but the Ruskinites who go into mourning at the completion of every railroad might dry their tears in Texas. Culture can progress under full steam for a good many years before it will despoil such Arcadias as the chaparral country between the sources of the Colorado and the mouth of the Rio Grande—the park like uplands, where the children of a million settlers would find as much play room as a car load of kids in the bluegrass countries. Soldiers who have visited the battle grounds of the wilderness may remember how strangely foot trails lose themselves in the jungle like pine thickets screening the roads at every turn and hiding the hunter's dog from the hunter; and in the same way the lines of the International Railroad cross the wilderness of Southern Texas. Half a mile from the track one may find sleepy hollows that seem never to have been waked by the scream of the iron horse: hill pastures, where the antelope browses as quietly as on the highlands of the Sierra Madre, even while the rocks echo the thunder of a train rushing by on its way to the distant station. And in the hills of the uplands there are rocks that have never heard that echo. Between the San Saba and Fort Davis, an area exceeding that of all Tennessee has never grieved the souls of its teamsters by a railroad survey. The northern part of this reservation contains one of the remaining buffalo pastures on this side of the Rocky Mountains. A few miles northeast of Fort Concho the old military road to New Mexico crosses the mosquito plain, and teamsters who travel that road in winter time are pretty sure to sight buffalos. Not in herds; the bison legions of the North American prairies are vanished forever; but troops of ten or twelve are still occasionally seen in the upland valleys, especially after hard frosts. In spring these survivors of better times take refuge in the dreary border of the staked plains, where they separate pair wise for greater security, and retreat farther hillward at the least sign of danger.—Southern Bivouac.

Elective Education.

Prof. Adams, in his address on the occasion of his inauguration as President of Cornell University, discussed the important question of elective education. He declared the history of education shows that the highest results have been attained under those systems that have given the greatest liberty of choice. He said that, though the introduction of elective works, "we are looking for the first time what might be called scholars, and in three or four colleges in the country the conditions of the highest success have at last been attained." It was his opinion, however, that the end of the second college year was the time when elective work could safely begin. This shows President Adams to belong to the conservative wing of the educational reformers. Some maintain that the student should be given the privilege of choice immediately on entering college. President Adams' recommendation gives the student time to ascertain what choice is best.—Current.

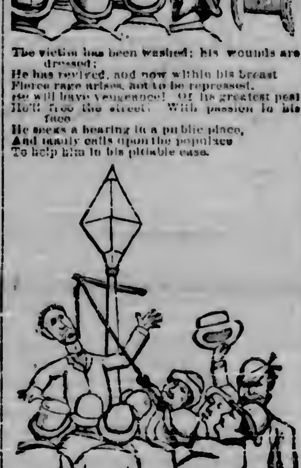
THE BANANA FIEND'S FATE.

A Harrowing Tale Which Isn't True, But Ought to Be.

Behold the wretch who, walking on the street,
Drops his banana peel beneath the feet
Of passers by—a murderous conceit,
A simple trick for harmfulness complete.
Observe his face as, [illegible]
He stalks along, the mouthing, munching ghoul!
Is he a vicious brute, or but a fool,
Some cruel spirit's all unconscious tool?

The victim comes! Upon the slippery snare
He squarely steps—his feet are in the air!
The fates assist him! Surely does he fare;
His head is cracked and mud is in his hair,
His arm is broken and his clothes are torn;
He is an object gory and forlorn.
Spruce as you please he left his home this morn,
And now he would an abattoir adorn.

The victim has been washed; his wounds are dressed;
He has revived, and now within his breast
Fierce rage arises, not to be repressed.
He will have vengeance! Of its greatest pest
He'll free the street! With passion in his face
He seeks a hearing in a public place,
And loudly calls upon the populace
To help him in his pitiable case.



His tale is told—a gruesome one to tell;
The cry that rises, vigorous and fell,
Frights the banana fiend. It is his knell!
They've caught and hung the wretch—and done it well—
Nor prayers, nor plaints their justice could abate.
Pendant, in rather solitary state,
The worthless body swings of him who late
Sinned as related—he deserved his fate!

A FORCIBLE DECISION.

Judge Peterson's Opinion on the Average Bill Collector.

A powerful decision was recently rendered against bill collectors by a Nashville Judge. The Judge, it seems, is in the habit of taking an appeal when a bill is presented to him. This annoyed the collectors. One bold young fellow was determined to face the jurist in his den and argue from tabulated evidence, showing that the Judge was much in debt to a wholesale liquor house. The unflinching young man walked into the court room, took a position in front of the Judge's desk and said:

"This is Judge Peterson I believe."

"Yes the Judge answered, as he suspiciously eyed the young man.

The collector handed the Judge a bill. The Judge looked at it, recognized it as an old acquaintance, handed it back to the young man and said:

"Tell them that I'll come by and settle."

"They've heard that several times already," the collector replied. "Now I want to know whether to come back here or not."

"No, you needn't."

"Well, then, I'll stay until you render your decision."

The Judge flew out over the desk, like a piece of whalebone, and knocked the young man down—knocked all his teeth into the southeast corner of his mouth. It is likely that the young man may appeal from the decision, but it should teach a lesson to bill collectors. Why, hang it, when a man says that he will be around the first of the month why don't they thank him politely and retire?—Arkansaw Traveler.

Evidence of Total Depravity.

"How is that you can tell such whoppers?" asked a caller, addressing the editor of the fish-story department.

"What has that to do with it?"

"A great deal. When we are writing fish stories we usually have Anna nigh us to help us."

The caller was carried to the hospital.—American Angler.

NITROGEN.

Its Effects Agriculturally Considered—A Subject of Interest to Thinking Farmers.

Nitrogen figures very prominently just now in the discussion of agricultural matters, and, for the proper understanding of what is said about it, it is necessary to understand what it is. It is the most abundant substance in nature, forming two-thirds of the weight of the atmosphere and one-sixth of the weight of what is known as the albuminous or nitrogenous portion of all organic matter. And a very curious fact in regard to it is that although it enters thus largely into the substance of all organic matter, yet no one knows how it enters into this combination, and it is in regard to this questionable behavior that the present discussion referred to arises, the question being: Do plants derive their nitrogen from the atmosphere directly or from some combination of it in the soil? And a vast amount of study and experiment has been expended upon the investigation for many years without any seeming progress toward any satisfactory solution. Sir J. B. Lawes who has been conducting a most elaborate and careful series of experiments for eighty years past without intermission, and who knows more about the matter than any other man, or it may be said truly, than all other men, sums up the present state of the question as follows: "Although there are difficulties in either case to be got over whether we attempt to account for the nitrogen of plants having its source in the atmosphere or in the soil, still it appears to me that there are more difficulties in forming a rational theory on the former supposition than on the latter. Theories, however, are of very little use in a question of this kind. What is really required are more facts, and, unfortunately, these are only accumulated by very slow and laborious processes." And we may add that almost all the facts which appertain to this discussion are those which have been gathered by Dr. Lawes and his able and patient assistants.

We do not propose to discuss this question at all this time, believing it to be of little use and a waste of time and labor, but only to state what nitrogen is and what its common combinations are, as a basis upon which our readers may form their own opinions, or a judgment upon what he may hear or read upon the main question.

Nitrogen is one of the gases of which the air consists, and it forms, as we have said, two-thirds of the weight of it. Curiously it is only mixed with the oxygen and is not combined with it, and simply dilutes the more active and powerful oxygen as one might mix two parts of water with one part of milk for the humane and profitable purpose, and making this substance less dangerous to bilious persons and more productive to the milkman. Oxygen alone would be to animal life like a blast to a furnace, and would cause it to consume itself with excessive rapidity, just as it causes a dull spark in charcoal to glow with great brilliance, and burn the combustible to ashes in a very short time, so that the nitrogen mixed with the oxygen renders the atmosphere fit to support life comfortably. It is a simple substance, by which it is meant that it is not made up of two or more substances combined, and that it has been found impossible to change it by analysis or any chemical process into anything else than itself by taking anything away from it. It is totally inert, and has no effect whatever upon any other substance in its free state; it can not support life, and so far as is known is wholly inactive until it is brought by some means or other into chemical combination with other substances. It combines with oxygen and then forms nitrous oxide and with more oxygen it becomes nitric acid, a most powerfully corrosive substance, the aquafortis of the old chemists. This combination is formed by the passage of an electric spark or a flash of lightning through the atmosphere, and the nitric acid thus produced explains the frequently noticed effect of a thunder shower upon vegetation, which shows a vivid greenness soon after having been thus watered.

It also combines with hydrogen and then forms ammonia, which is a pungent gas, so well known when dissolved in water as the aqua ammonia, or ammonia water of the druggists. Ammonia is changed into nitric acid by combination with oxygen and the loss of the hydrogen. Nitric acid combines with all the alkalies, as lime, potash, soda, etc., and with all the metals, excepting gold, which is only acted upon by a mixture of nitric and hydro-chloric acids. When therefore nitric acid—or, as it is supposed, ammonia—becomes mingled in any way with the soil it combines with the lime, potash or soda contained in it, or it is dissolved in the water and then becomes available for absorption by plants, and in these forms only, it is supposed, is nitrogen taken up by plants and made a part of their substance. The nitrogenous part of plants consists of albumen and legumin, the latter is almost identical with albumen, but it is found only in a class of plants known as the leguminosæ, to which peas, beans, clover, the locust tree, and other food-bearing plants belong; the nitrogen in animal substance is found chiefly in the fibrin of blood and flesh, the caseine of milk, the white or albumen of eggs, and some other chemically related substances, and about one-sixth part by weight of these substances consists of nitrogen. The leguminosæ are especially rich in nitrogenous matters, and for this reason clover is regarded with great interest as the type of this class of plants which are of the greatest use to farmers for the improvement of the soil and for the facility with which investigations can be conducted and important facts may be gathered. And as clover is remarkably rich in nitrogen, and seems to gather it abundantly and grow luxuriantly in circumstances in which other plants can not procure it and fail to grow at all, the question as to whence and how this nitrogen is procured has become one which has intense interest for every thinking and studious farmer.—Henry Stewart, in N. Y. Times.

Communication With Mars.

A French astronomer claims to have established communication with the inhabitants of the planet Mars. He recently built some very high mounds on a plain in Italy arranged in squares and triangles, signifying "Do you know the theorem of the hypothenuse?" He asserts that certain geometric signs have appeared since on the face of the planet indicating an affirmative response. Time was when such an announcement would have been speedily followed by the incarceration of the scientist in some safe asylum for lunatics, but the world has become so accustomed to the performance of impossibilities that it requires great courage to manifest disbelief in any scientific theory, however wild it may seem.—Current.

—A New London boy, with milk pitcher in hand, fell headlong down the back stairs. He had regained his feet and was brushing the dirt from his clothes when his mother appeared at the head of the stairs and asked: "Did you break the pitcher?" "No, I didn't; but I will," was the quick response. And he did.—Hartford Times.

—Husband—The census-taker was in, dear. He demanded the age of each of the family, and I was obliged to give him yours. He said it was the law. Wife (enraged)—Law! What do I care for law? John Smith, did you tell that man my age? Husband (hurriedly)—Yes, I told him you were twenty-three. Wife (mollified)—Well, I suppose the law has got to be respected.—Chicago Tribune.

—A little boy in Warrenton visited his aunt in the country not long since. One day at the dinner table the lady complained that a jar of favorite preserves had mysteriously disappeared from the pantry. Each one present disclaimed any knowledge of the fact, except the little boy, who remained studiously silent. At length he was asked if he knew anything of the missing fruit, when he replied: "My pa don't allow me to talk at the table."—Warrenton (Ga.) Clipper.

SENT BY EXPRESS.

Persons Who Are Labeled and Transferred the Same as Any Piece of Goods.

"Can live stock be shipped by express?" asked a passing reporter yesterday of an employe of an express company.

"Certainly. You can ship anything for cash or C. O. D."

"What's the objection then to traveling by express with a tag tied in your button-hole?"

"None that I know of, except being jammed around in the car with a lot of boxes and bundles. I've seen people shipped by express."

"Dead people?"

"No, real live persons. We had a case of that kind only a few months ago. It happens once or twice a year. The case that I refer to was a young boy about ten years old. He was billed to Jacksonville, Ill., and had a tag on him for that place. What's more he was sent C. O. D. I don't know how we got him, but I suppose some poor relative, unable to buy a ticket, shipped him to somebody's care because unable to keep the lad himself. Those are the circumstances which usually surround such a case. A boy can travel quite as well in the express car, with plenty to eat, as he can in a cushioned seat alone—better, in fact, because the messenger usually takes an interest in him and lets him amuse himself.

"When I was on the road I got one every little while. After a few miles they soon get used to it and don't mind it a bit. I had a boy on my run once who was billed from Boston to San Francisco. He was twelve years old, had a basket of grub with him and was a terror to the messengers. He'd have his hand into every sack of peanuts and basket of fruit in the car if he wasn't watched."

"Are they shipped by weight or otherwise?"

"By weight—so much a pound. The advantage to these people is apparent. They are transferred at transfer stations in the wagon with other goods and treated just like regular express matter. But they are entitled to no more consideration than a box of soap."

"What is the comparative cost between the two methods of traveling by express and ticket?"

"For short distances, as for instance from here to Monroe, the express method is cheaper provided the child is of ordinary weight, but I would advise a fat person to buy a ticket every time. I couldn't say in reference to long distances, but I should think it would be cheaper in that case too, with the same conditions in respect to weight. The express companies don't like to handle human merchandise, and I presume they would shut down on it if it became any more frequent. The railroad companies would probably object, too."—Detroit Tribune.

MACHINE —AND— BOILER WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinest; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

A Discourse on "Winter, and How to Meet It."

The Dissipations Incident to the Season Forcibly Presented and Illustrated—A Plea for Abstinence On the Natal Day of the New Year.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, on his recent return to Brooklyn from his Western lecture tour, chose the above timely topic for his first Sunday evening discourse, taking for his text:

Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.—Matthew xxiv, 20.

The inhabitants of the old cities were here told that they would have to fly for their lives. Such flight would be painful, even in the flush of spring time, but superlatively aggravating if in cold weather; therefore they were told to pray that their flight be not in the winter. There is something in the winter season that not only tests our physical endurance but, especially in the city, tries our moral character. It is the winter months that ruin morally and forever many of our young men. We sit in the house on a winter's night, and hear the storm raging on the outside and imagine the helpless crafts driven on the coast, but if our ears were only good enough, we could on any winter night hear the crash of 100 moral shipwrecks.

Many who came last September to town, by the first of March will have been blasted. It only takes one winter to ruin a young man. When the long winter evenings have come many of our young men will improve them in forming a more intimate acquaintance with books, contracting higher social friendships and strengthening and ennobling characters. But not so with all. I will show you before I get through that at this season of the year temptations are especially rampant, and my counsel is, look out how you spend your winter nights.

[illegible]

...moderate beverages. You take only ale, and a man has to drink a large amount of it to become intoxicated. Yes; but there's not in all the city to-day an inebriate that did not begin with ale. "XXX," what does that mark mean? "XXX" on the beer barrels; "XXX" on the brewer's dray; "XXX" on the side of the bottle. Not being able to find any one who could tell me what this mark means, I have had to guess that the whole thing was an allegory. "XXX"—that is, thirty heart breaks, thirty agonies, thirty desolated homes, thirty chances for a drunkard's grave, thirty ways to perdition. "XXX!" If I were to write a story the first chapter would be "XXX," the last the pawnbroker's shop. Be watchful! At this season all the allurements to dissipation will be especially busy. Let not your flight to hell be in the winter.

I also remark that the winter evenings, through their very length, allow great swing for indulgences. Few young men would have the taste to go to their rooms at seven o'clock and sit until eleven, reading Motley's Dutch Republic or John Foster's essays. The young men who have been confined to the store all day want fresh air and sight-seeing; and they must go somewhere. The most of them have of a winter's evening three or four hours of leisure. After the evening repast the young man puts on his hat and coat and goes out. "Come in here," cries another. "Go," says Satan; "you ought to see for yourself." "Why don't you go?" says a comrade, "it is a shame for a young man to be as green as you are. By this time you ought to have seen everything."

Especially is temptation strong when business is dull. I have noticed that men spend more money when they have little to spend. The tremendous question to be settled by our great population, day by day, is, how to get a livelihood. Many of our young men just starting for themselves are very much discouraged. They had hoped before this to have set up a household of their own. But their gains have been slow, their discouragements...

Look out what you say to him; for a trifle he will take your life. Lower down and lower down until, outcast of God and man, he lies in the alms-house a blotch of loathsomeness and pain. Sometimes he calls out for God, and then for more drink. Now he prays, now curses, now laughs as fiends laugh. Then bites his nails to the quick. Then runs both hands through the shock of hair that hangs about his head like the mane of a wild beast. Then shivers until the cot shakes with unutterable terror. Then, with uplifted fists, fights back the devils or clutches the serpents that seem winding him in their coils. Then asks for water which is instantly consumed by his cracked lips. Going his round some morning the surgeon finds him dead. Straighten the limbs. You need not try to comb out or shove back the matted locks. Wrap him in a sheet. Put him in a box. Two men will carry it down to the wagon at the door. With chalk write on the top of the box the name of the destroyed.

Do you know who it is?

That is you. Oh, man, if, yielding to the temptations to a dissipated life, you go out and perish.

There is a way that seemeth bright and fair and beautiful, but the end thereof is death.

Devote these December, January and February evenings to high pursuits, innocent amusements, intelligent, sociabilities and Christian attainments. Do not waste this winter. We shall soon have seen the last snow-shower, and passed up into the companionship of him whose raiment is white as snow—as no fuller on earth can whiten it. To the right-hearted the winter nights of earth will soon end in the June morning of heaven.

The river of God from under the throne never freezes over. The foliage of life's fair tree is never frost-bitten. The festivals and hilarities and family gatherings of Christmas times on earth will give way to the larger reunions, and the brighter lights, and the gladder scenes, and the sweeter garlands and the richer feastings...

The Democratic Administration Charged with Violating the Civil-Service Rules—The So-Called "Private" Examinations.

The Administration of Mr. Cleveland is pledged to Civil-service reform—on paper. In reality it violates both the spirit and letter of the law whenever an opportunity is offered for so doing without fear of discovery. It was only a few days ago that the President temporarily suspended one of the Civil-service rules in order to make the appointment of ex-Alderman Sterling possible. Now it is Secretary Lamar and his Assistant Secretary, Mr. Muldrow, who are trying to see what their personal influence will do in securing appointments for people who can not be certified in the regular way by the Civil-service Commission. Here is a flagrant example of the way in which the law is violated by them:

In August, 1884, there occurred in the cafe of the Riggs House a shooting affair, which for days afterward furnished the town with food for gossip. The persons concerned in it were Mrs. E. L. Barnes, a clerk in the Second Comptroller's office; a Mr. Dougherty, employed in the Treasury Department, and a woman whose name was not ascertained at the time. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

A Discourse on "Winter, and How to Meet It."

The Dissipations Incident to the Season Forcibly Presented and Illustrated—A Plea for Abstinence On the Natal Day of the New Year.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, on his recent return to Brooklyn from his Western lecture tour, chose the above timely topic for his first Sunday young discourse, taking for his text:

Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.—Matthew xxiv, 20.

The inhabitants of the old cities were here told that they would have to fly for their lives. Such flight would be painful, even in the flush of spring time, but superlatively aggravating if in cold weather; therefore they were told to pray that their flight be not in the winter. There is something in the winter season that not only tests our physical endurance but, especially in the city, tries our moral character. It is the winter months that ruin morally and forever many of our young men. We sit in the house on a winter's night, and hear the storm raging on the outside and imagine the helpless crafts driven on the coast, but if our ears were only good enough, we could on any winter night hear the crash of 100 moral shipwrecks.

Many who came last September to town, by the first of March will have been blasted. It only takes one winter to ruin a young man. When the long winter evenings have come many of our young men will improve them in forming a more intimate acquaintance with books, contracting higher social friendships and strengthening and ennobling characters. But not so with all. I will show you before I get through that at this season of the year temptations are especially rampant, and my counsel is, look out how you spend your winter nights!

I remark, first, that there is no season of the year in which vicious allurements are so active. ...

... moderate beverages. You take only ale, and a man has to drink a large amount of it to become intoxicated. Yes; but there's not in all the city to-day an inebriate that did not begin with ale. "XXX," what does that mark mean? "XXX" on the beer barrels; "XXX" on the brewer's dray; "XXX" on the side of the bottle. Not being able to find any one who could tell me what this mark means, I have had to guess that the whole thing was an allegory. "XXX"—that is, thirty heart-breaks, thirty agonies, thirty desolated homes, thirty chances for a drunkard's grave, thirty ways to perdition. "XXX!" If I were to write a story the first chapter would be "XXX," the last the pawnbroker's shop. Be watchful! At this season all the allurements to dissipation will be especially busy. Let not your flight to hell be in the winter.

I also remark that the winter evenings, through their very length, allow great swing for indulgences. Few young men would have the taste to go to their rooms at seven o'clock and sit until eleven, reading Motley's Dutch Republic or John Foster's essays. The young men who have been confined to the store all day want fresh air and sight-seeing; and they must go somewhere. The most of them have of a winter's evening three or four hours of leisure. After the evening repast the young man puts on his hat and coat and goes out. "Come in here," cries another. "Go," says Satan; "you ought to see for yourself." Why don't you go?" says a comrade. "It is a shame for a young man to be as green as you are. By this time you ought to have seen everything."

Especially is temptation strong when business is dull. I have noticed that men spend more money when they have little to spend. The tremendous question to be settled by our great population, day by day, is, how to get a livelihood. Many of our young men just starting for themselves are very much discouraged. They had hoped before this to have set up a household of their own. But their gains have been slow, their discouragements many. The young man can hardly take care of himself. ...

—Try this old receipe for apple fritters. One quart of milk, three well-beaten eggs and enough flour to make a batter. Core and pare twelve large apples, mince finely and mix with the batter. Have a pan of boiling lard and drop the batter into the lard with a table-spoon, frying in the same manner as doughnuts. Serve hot, and eat with any acid sauce.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

—The farmer who has any desire to economize should never forget that commercial fertilizers are to be resorted to only when the home supply fails to furnish enough; and also that because he is able at all times to get in the market whatever amount of fertilizers he may desire, it does not justify him in permitting anything to be wasted on the farm that can be made to take the place of the fertilizers he can buy.—N. E. Farmer.

Is Every Body Drunk?

Among the many stories Lincoln used to relate was the following: Trudging along a lonely road one morning on my way to the county seat, Judge —— overtook me with his wagon and invited me to a seat. We had not gone far before the wagon began to wobble. Said I: "Judge, I think your coachman has taken a drop too much." Putting his head out of the window, the judge shouted: "Why, you infernal scoundrel, you are drunk!" Turning round with great gravity, the coachman said: "Be dad! but that's the first rightful decision your Honor's giv'n in twel' month!"

If people knew the facts they would be surprised to learn how many people reel in the streets who never "drink a drop." They are the victims of sleeplessness, of drowsy days, of apoplectic tendencies, whose blood is set on fire by uric acid. Some day they will reel no more—they will drop dead, just because they haven't the moral courage to defy professional prejudice, and by use of the wonderful Warner's safe cure neutralize the uric acid in the system and thus get rid of the "drunkenness in the blood."—The American Rural Home.

"Why, it's the most strengthening food you can eat." "Precisely, but I don't want to be tied to the steak all the time."—Boston Budget.

"Voltagal" on Electricity.

The passenger Department of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway announce the publication of a new and valuable work, whose scope and intent is best expressed on its title page, which reads as follows: "Voltagal, Genius of Electricity, or Ned Benson's Adventures and Talk with one of the Genii, by "A Man" of the Rock Island Route—respectfully dedicated to the Boys and Girls of America, by the General Ticket and Passenger Agent of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway." It is an appropriate sequel to Watt Stephenson on steam and its uses, which attained such a popularity a year ago. It is a carefully written pamphlet of 60 pages, elegantly printed, and will be sent to any applicant on receipt of 10 cents in postage stamps. Address,

Current Events.

Mrs. Meade, widow of Major General George Meade, the Gettysburg hero, died at her residence in Philadelphia, on last Thursday.

A cold wave of almost unprecedented severity passed over portions of the North on the 8th and 9th, extending from the northern portion of the upper Mississippi valley, and thence southeastward to the Atlantic States, covering the gulf and Tennessee. It has been unusually severe in the southern states. In the northwest railroads have been blockaded, and stock has suffered greatly.

The Edmunds Utah polygamy bill has passed the Senate. Senator Edmunds created some excitement on rising to speak on one of the amendments. Looking about him, and finding comparatively few republicans in their seats he said: "As hardly any of the friends of human liberty are in the Senate, I will address myself to the reform men."

Another is added to the long list of horrible murders in Michigan this winter. On the 8th, at Battle Creek, Dr. Martin White murdered his wife and two children by cutting their throats with a razor, and then took his own life in the same manner. The two children—daughters—were aged twelve and four years. When found the bodies were frozen.

Twenty years ago Senator Sherman secured the renomination for Senator before the Ohio Republican Legislative caucus, after a long and bitter contest. On Thursday night he was renominated for Senator in an open caucus, receiving the vote of every Republican member of the Legislature. Mr. Sherman is serving his fourth term in the Senate, and the unanimity with which he is chosen for a fifth term is evidence of the strong hold he has upon the Ohio Republicans.

Investigation shows that Trinity Church corporation, in the city of New York, owns some of the worst tenement houses in the city. They never make repairs, and filth and rottenness prevails to such an extent that scarlet fever has carried off many victims, while delinquent tenants have been ejected with peculiar heartlessness. In short, Trinity church is one of the hardest landlords in New York.

The prospect for the passage of the river and harbor bill at the present session of congress is good, and Michigan has a large interest in the matter. Some separate bills will also be introduced. A bill providing for the purchase by the government of the Portage lake ship canal is now before the commerce committee of the senate. The chief of engineers reports that the growth of the commerce through the Sault canal is so remarkably large that a new dock is needed at once and recommends its immediate construction. He also recommends and urges the building of a dry dock at Sault Ste. Marie. The members of the house also have a few bills relative to river and harbor matters. Mr. Maybury has a wreckage bill and one to bridge Detroit river. Mr. Cutcheon has already presented one providing for an additional light house district with headquarters at Muskegon.

New York Tribune: Dakota may be cheated out her rights but she will have the satisfaction of knowing who cheated her, and pent up resentment, like pent-up water, flows with a rush when it once gets loose.

Kansas City Journal: The Republican party has never refused to accept the consequences of duty discharged nor any responsibility the Democratic party may have shifted upon it from the day it accepted the consequences of rebellion and the responsibility of saving the Union.

St. Louis Post Dispatch: So far there has been nothing to assure the public that "turning the rascals out" means anything more than a change of one set of rascals for another and hungrier set—a transfer of the patronage from one set of brokers and jobbers to another as disreputable and unscrupulous.

The gentle philanthropists who shudder with horror every time an attempt is made to check the growth of the mormon evil, have a singular habit of urging the unrelenting extermination of the Apaches in the southwest. And yet the difference between a hostile Apach and an "avenging angel" is simply a matter of clothes.

If Secretary Whitney's administration weathers the storms of his three coming years as well as the staunch Dolphin, built by an old gentleman by the name of Roach, weathered the storms upon its trial trip, he may consider himself as fortunate. Was it because Roach built such a ship that the administration thought it necessary to ruin him and turn his 1,000 skilled workmen adrift? Or was it simply to spite one who has done more American ship-building than any other living man? Did that make him an "offensive partisan?"

FROZEN TO DEATH.

Andrew Schoffen, of Ironton, Found Dead on the Ice Near His Home.

On Saturday evening last, Andrew Schoffen left East Jordan for his home at Ironton, on foot, and by way of the ice on South Arm. Sunday morning he was found frozen to death within sixty rods of his home. The report that he had been drinking heavily at East Jordan is indignantly denied by his friends. Mr. Schoffen formerly lived in Kenosha, where he was a prominent German citizen. He has lived at Ironton about five years, where he has been something of a dealer and shipper. He was latterly interested in a brewery with Robert A. Miller. He is buried to-day, with the rites of the Catholic church. Fuller particulars will be found in our Ironton correspondence.

Now East Jordan, go light on the idle man question. There is not an idle man in Ironton, even our lazy man and our clown are at work—don't play poker either.

We have to report the third sudden death which has occurred in this vicinity in the last six months. On Saturday afternoon Mr. Andrew Schoffen started from East Jordan at 3:30 o'clock for Ironton via the ice. On Sunday morning his family who were expecting him home, kept a lookout up the Arm for his coming. They saw an object a short distance from the house on the ice, but supposed it to be a block of wood, until about 10 o'clock, when they saw a man passing, go up to it and then start, and this aroused a suspicion, and they at once went to the body which proved to be the husband and father, lying at full lenght on the ice with his head to the north, only a stone's throw from his home. A jury was summoned and rendered a verdict of "Frozen to Death." It is needless to say that much sympathy is expressed by all for the bereaved family. Mr. Schoffen was about 55 years old, sturdy and strong, a good neighbor and will be much missed by his townsmen.

Dr. Thomas' Theology.

"My method of dealing with questions is not so much that of isolated texts, but rather to take the analogy of faith, and the general scope and teaching of the bible is my support for the view I take of the atonement and the doctrine of endless punishment. Mr. Bland does not state one view of the atonement—in fact, the methodists have no well-defined view; they have an article of faith and I suppose many of them would hesitate to accept that in its strong form. The standard of authority has never been defined, and in this respect Watson and Wesley both differ from Dr Raymond.

I look upon life not as a probation, but as an education, and hold that the opportunity of doing better does not end with death. The chief objection that Mr. Bland brings against this view of the endless-punishment doctrine is that it encourages people to procrastinate. He and all methodists preach that a man may sin all his life and at the last moment take the benefit of the atonement and go right to heaven. The methodists say that probation ends with death; that there is no opportunity of doing good after death. They say a man may become worse but cannot become better. That view is based on the theory that the benefits of the atonement or the time for accepting these benefits is limited by death, just as in a bankrupt law your opportunity expires by limitation.

But I don't understand the teachings of Jesus as Mr. Bland does. I do not think the bible teaches endless punishment for any soul; there may be endless loss, for one who has wasted his life cannot be what he might have been. But we cannot think that God will inflict endless punishment, in any such sense as the methodist teach, upon a soul when there is no possibility of that soul becoming better, or that the existence of any soul can be an endless curse. We must believe that God's punishments are in love and for correction, for the good of the punished, and that existence must prove a blessing to every soul that God has created.

The administration sets a good example to the people to hoard gold, and has also done its best to disgrace and reduce below par both paper and silver. There was no necessity to call in and cancel the one and two dollar bills; on the contrary there was a reason for leaving them in the hands of the people. Men who prophesy evil will aid in bringing it about; but mark this, the people will know just where to place the blame if disaster should come. The Treasury seems to be run more in the interest of Wall street than in the interests of the people.
